Great Lakes Restoration Initiave, or GLRI, was launched in 2010 to clean-up the Great Lakes, revitalize it's ecosystem, and combat invasive species. It relies on federal money, mostly through the EPA. The bankroll could take a substantial hit, if reported cuts to the EPA come to furition. (("The GLRI has been instrumental in our fight against the Asian Carp. If those funds were to away tomorrow I'd be hard pressed to tell you where they would come from.")) Dr. Marc Gaden is the Legislative Liaison for the Great Lakes Fishery Commission.

When it comes invasive species, he says prevention is key. A major budget cut would halt projects in the Chicago-area, necessary for that prevention, he says. The GLRI has also been credited with tackling major contamination in the Great Lakes, specifically Lake Erie. (("Water quality has not really been a partisan issue until now unfortunately.)) Erie County Legislator Patrick Burke, a Democrat, has started an online petition opposing any cuts to funding for Great Lakes protection. Burke fears if these reportedly aggressive cuts happen, the progress Buffalo's waterfront has seen under the GLRI could be ruined. (("We've lived through enough major environmental issues here in western New York, Love Canal. People don't forget those things.")) Within the first day, Burke's petition received 1,000 signatures. Once it gets ot 10,000.... he's sending it to the White House. Republican Congressman Chris Collins, a Trump supporter, has always a history of supporting GLRI funding. In a statement, he tells News 4 "Right now, nothing in the President's budget has been finalized. In past budgets, I have always supported increased funding for the Great Lakes Restoration Initiative. I am aware of the rumored cuts to the Great Lakes Restoration Initiative and monitoring the situation closely."

((""My biggest thing was to be a part of something bigger than myself, to be a part of a team." For Nick Jones, a West Seneca West grad, his first taste of team was not on the high school football field. "I tried to play football but it didn't work out," Jones said with a laugh. Instead, right out of high school, he joined the Marine Corps and spent five years traveling the world and protecting our country. "I went to Afghanistan in 2010 and we just tried to win the hearts and minds of the locals there from the Taliban. We laughed, we cried and you just wake up every morning like 'I can't believe this is really happening.'" Nick played football with his fellow Marines, and learned that catching is something he is pretty good at. When he returned home from his tour of duty he enrolled at Erie County Community College and tried out for their football team. "I had a decent year for my first time playing football and tight end. I started getting letters from big schools and my mind was racing! I couldn't believe it was all happening." Jones settled on UTEP but, his stay there didn't last long. The reality of playing college football took a toll on him physically and mentally. "I thought it was over for me, I thought this dream was ending. I got in my own head and I never want to go to that place again." A fellow Marine encouraged Nick to return to the football field, and he enrolled at Buffalo State. It turned out to be the perfect fit. Last month he was selected to the National Bowl, a showcase for the top division II and III athletes in the country. But, that isn't where this story ends, he has been invited to the Tropical Bowl and will compete against Division I talent, some who have been invited to the combine. "It is a huge game for me and for my career." And from there the fate of Nick's football career will rest in the hands of scouts. He knows no matter what happens, he will always be a part of a team. "Transitioning from the Marine Corps to civilian life is hard in general, and being a part of a football team kind of helped me transition. The two biggest things to be is mental and physical health so, I just want to stay positive and keep working towards my dreams.")

16 month old Kaitlyn Crutchlow eats this mixture of peanut butter and water every day to try to prevent her from developing a peanut allergy. Both her brothers are severely allergic. (KC SOT) you must have been scared ((SOT Jenny Crutchlow/Mother)) Oh of course, of course. I was terrified. It's the exact opposite of what they told us when our boys were little New guidelines from the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases recommend introducing high risk babies like Kaitlyn to foods containing peanuts. Dr. Hugh Sampson of Mount Sinai Hospital helped write the recommendations. (SOT Dr. Hugh Sampson/Professor of Pediatrics, Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai) we're saying not only it's okay, we're saying go do it. In these high risk children we need to get peanut into their diet early to try to prevent peanut allergy. The guidelines say high risk babies with severe eczema or egg allergy should be given peanut protein in the first 4 to 6 months. (SOT Dr. Hugh Sampson/Professor of Pediatrics, Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai) I wish something like this would cure peanut allergy but you know it's unlikely... I think we can significantly reduce the amount of peanut allergy Kaitlyn got her first taste of peanut at the doctor's office. Her parents use a dropper at home and keep her in just a diaper to avoid contamination with her allergic brothers. (KC+2SHT) (((SOT Jenny Crutchlow/Mother))) it's amazing. and she doesn't react. she eats peanuts every day. I think as long as we maintain that she will never have to worry about that won't be a problem in her life. It won't be an obstacle

You already knew fast food wasn't the healthiest option… But a new study is revealing a new health concern… not in the food, but in packaging. Fluorinated chemicals are really unique in that they never break down. And Tom Bruton, of the green science policy institute, says researchers found those chemicals in about a third of fast food packaging tested… from dozens of popular chains nationwide… chemicals known to migrate from the wrapper into the food itself. Nat The chemicals are used to repel fast food oil… the same class of chemicals used in water resistant, stain resist or non-stick products.
Some forms have been linked to health affects like cancer, elevated cholesterol, thyroid and developmental effects on children. Food contact paper is a direct rout of exposure, its as if you were drinking them in your drinking water. Incidentally, previous studies did find these chemicals in drinking water. Mos we have chemicals everywhere right? Reaction to this study is mixed… Mos seems like it's just one more thing to be worried about Mos the public should know about it MOS They should be able to disclose as much as possible. And Brunton notes, point of the study was not to scare you out of eating fast food, rather to expose the chemicals - researchers say simply aren't necessary. What they say in the study is that clearly a lot of these fast food establishments don't know these are there. The chemical industry is critical of the research, Stating: "Without further examination... it's impossible to draw any definitive conclusions about the nature and source of the compounds that were detected in this particular study They also note the industry is switching to -- what are believed to be -- safer versions of the chemicals. And keep in mind, these are chemicals we're exposed to every day. Julie I still have a rain jacket, I still wear makeup I still sit on my couch. Tom you're likely not going to get the same kind of exposure from those products, you know you're not eating your rain jacket right? TAG: ONLY TWO OF THE RESTAURANTS RESPONDED TO THE STUDY'S AUTHORS while THEY DID NOT IDENTIFY THE RESTAURANT NAMES - RESEARCHERS NOTED ONE RESTAURANT SAID IT BELIEVED THEIR PACKAGING WAS FREE OF THE CHEMICALS, THE OTHER SAID IT VERIFIED WITH SUPPLIERS THAT THE PACKAGING DID NOT CONTAIN THE CHEMICALS....SAN FRANCISCO, JULIE WATTS, CBS NEWS,
