If you're driving, use caution while you're in the western counties. The State of Emergency

	WKJV WLXZ WKGW WLWG WYND				helps the state coordinate storm response and get ready for anything else that happens. Within the day, four to seven inches of rain fell across portions of the mountains adding to the already heavily saturated ground. Areas along the Blue Ridge have received 10-20" of rain since May 15th, which means downed trees and mudslides. Scattered showers and thunderstorms are gonna happen for the next several days, which means a the threat of flash flooding across the mountains. Big concerns right now are the stability of mountain slopes and several dams. Mudslides have already happened in numerous areas. Local and state officials are closely monitoring the dams at Lake Lure, Lake Tahoma, Lake Tuxedo and North Fork Lake and are sending state dam safety engineers to areas of concern. State and local officials are keeping a close watch on rivers across western NC, where several rivers are experiencing minor flooding and the French Broad River at Blantyre is supposed to get flooding later today. Watch out for several rivers across eastern NC that are near or forecast to be near Minor Flood Stage over the coming days.
