Dawn Ostrom is the show to talk about rejuvenation of Elmwood shopping center that opened originally in the seventies. There is a push to change the area into a more “live, work, play” set up much like Perkins Rowe in Baton Rouge. There will be more businesses opening there, another grocery, more sit down restaurants, and five hundred housing units phased in in the next ten years. This will be achieved partly through an economic development district where any extra tax money in the area will be used towards the redevelopment.

Richard Thompson was on Informed Sources to discuss the sale of the music club Tipitana’s. The sale had significance not only for the music club scene, but also for the financial troubles of a local businessman. The Tipitina’s foundation had been raising money to support musicians and music education, but the business of the nonprofit was intertwined with the former owner’s own personal business. He has faced civil and federal lawsuits. Luckily, a local funk band is the one who bought the music venue and will try to uphold the venue and the history of the venue.

Mike Perlstein was on Informed Sources discussing bail reform that has been implemented in Orleans Parish. There have been a lot of unanswered questions about the new system because it was rolled out in almost complete secrecy. Part of the movement is to eliminate the bail bond industry. The argument has been that people that are arrested who are poor are punished because of their economic status because they can't afford to pay bail like people in higher classes can. There has also been a major push to lower the jail population as well. However, as a result of the reform, bail has been significantly lowered, maybe a little too much in some cases.

“Rise!” examines the long road to civil rights, when the deep contradictions in American society finally became unsustainable. African Americans who fought fascism in World War II came home to face the same old racial violence. But mass media — from print to radio and TV — broadcast that injustice, planting seeds of resistance. The success of black entrepreneurs and entertainers fueled African-American hopes and dreams. In 1955, Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat on a city bus in Montgomery, Alabama, heralding the dawn of a movement of resistance, with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as its public face. Before long, masses of African Americans practiced this nonviolent approach to integrate public schools, lunch counters and more. Nonviolence, however, was often met with violence. In 1968, Dr. King was assassinated, unleashing a new call for “Black Power” across the country

After 1968, African Americans set out to build a bright future on the foundation of the civil rights movement's victories, but a growing class disparity threatened to split the black community. As African Americans won political office across the country and the black middle class made progress, larger economic and political forces isolated the black urban poor. When Barack Obama was elected president in 2008, many hoped that America had finally transcended racism. By the time of his second victory, however, it was clear that many issues, including true racial equality, remain to be resolved. How will African Americans help redefine the United States in the years to come?
