60 seconds

President Trump is threatening to try to force Congress to adjourn so he could fill his administration's vacancies using recess appointments, without Senate approval. It's the second time this week he's claimed unprecedented executive authority amid the coronavirus pandemic. The president cited a never-used constitutional power to shut down Congress if the House and Senate are in disagreement over adjourning. In article 2, the President may adjourn them if needed. The Washington Post reports Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell spoke to the president, but signaled that he was NOT on board with the president's plan.

🔊 Fairfax County governmental leaders announce reopening plans

60 seconds

The George Floyd protests brought more awareness to symbols of racial tensions and division. Virginia's Attorney General says he'll defend the Governor's effort to remove Richmond's statue of Robert E. Lee. Mark Herring says a temporary injunction against the removal was issued without his office being informed of the hearing. A recent lawsuit contends that the state promised to protect the statue when it annexed the land from Henrico County in the late 19th Century. But Herring says Governor Ralph Northam has both the authority and the moral obligation to remove what he calls a badge of white supremacy. WTOP reporter Neil Augustine reports on the lawsuit.

Montgomery County government considers policy changes for police force 6/14

6/14- 611p, 711p, 811p, 911p, 1020p, 1111p

• :60 seconds

Virginia lawmakers held a one-day legislative session today that is historic in nature. The lawmakers grappled with how to deal with fallout from the coronavirus. Typically, the so-called "veto session" takes up the governor's vetoes and proposed amendments. But now logistics are a major issue for our area and the constituents in the districts. House Delegates met under a canopy outside the Capitol while the state Senate met in a giant event space at the Virginia Science Museum. Lawmakers will practice social distancing and be far apart when discussing their votes and the agenda at hand. Also, Governor Northam has suspended all new spending in the two-year financial plan lawmakers considered. This includes teacher's raises, frozen tuition and new money for dental coverage for adults on Medicaid.

Unemployment assistance across the area is a serious concern

5/08: 1204p , 104p, 204p, 304p, 405p, 505p, 605p, 706p, 806p, 906p, 1006p, 1106p

60 seconds

Hundreds of thousands of people are out of work in Maryland, Virginia and the District. There is now increased awareness that local government must be part of the solution and draft bills to help local citizens make ends meet during this time. Local lawmakers representing each state and the district are coming up with strategies to help and recognize that more must be done to help the unemployed. WTOP's Mitchell Miller is on Capitol Hill speaking to VA congressman Don Byer about ways to keep unemployment benefits going for months, not weeks.

Fairfax County government approved a measure to create local business grants

60 seconds
June 2 is primary day in Maryland -- and because of the coronavirus, it's the first one statewide to be held mostly by mail. If local residents have waited until today to vote, WTOP's Michelle Basch reports on how local citizens can make their vote count. WTOP's Mitch Miller reports on the measures on the ballot and as well as the results through the evening as polls close.
- 🔊 Prince George's County Board of Education will consider ending armed school resource officers in buildings.
6/9: 504a, 604a, 704a, 804a, 904a, 1004a, 1104a, 1205p, 141p
60 seconds
As a reaction to the George Loyd protests, the Prince George's County Board of Education will consider a resolution Thursday to end its agreement with law enforcement to place armed school resource officers in buildings. The board says the presence of officers in schools is counterproductive to the goal of keeping students out of prison. It's among actions several jurisdictions are taking to review policies around policing schools and townships. WTOP reporter Michelle Murillo reports on the effort.

National Security

- 🔊 Police departments are developing protocols to protect officers
4/3: 506a, 606a, 706a, 806a, 906a, 1006a, 1106a
60 seconds
It is a problem for all police departments across the country that must balance safety of their police force with that of protecting the public. There is greater understanding that covid 19 spreads, first responders are also getting sick. So local departments are planning ahead to make sure they can avoid any changes to emergency response. Often, police departments can keep sick people at home and still provide important protection for their community. WTOP's Megan Cloherty reports that for Maryland, Virginia and DC police departments, because they have a larger force and can accommodate sick officers more easily.
- 🔊 Due to second amendment concerns, a Virginia gun range must be allowed to open to customers
April 28 • 511a, 611a, 721a, 821a, 935a, 1043a, 1143a, 1251ap, 143p, 253p, 354p •
:60 seconds
A judge has ruled that a Virginia gun range must be allowed to open to customers, despite a statewide executive order requiring nonessential businesses to close because of the coronavirus. The order, issued by a Lynchburg judge, says federal and state protections on the right to bear arms outweigh any emergency authority held by Governor Ralph Northam to order the gun range closed. The ruling narrowly applies to this specific business in this one jurisdiction. If the ruling isn't overturned by the Virginia Supreme Court, it could lead to other challenges to the Governor's emergency order.
- 🔊 Federal Workers asking for Hazard pay amid Corona Virus

As coronavirus continued to sweep through the area, there has been increased awareness of citizens in our community that work in the federal government are on the front lines of providing services to the country that they might now be in danger. Therefore, there's a new congressional push to provide federal workers with hazard pay during the pandemic. Federal employers wrote to the President with a goal of 25 percent pay increase. WTOP's Mitchell Miller reported on the progress, and the details, from Capitol Hill.

🔊 The safety of the jailed criminal population is receiving more awareness during Covid 19

5/18: 1204p, 106p, 206p, 306p, 451p, 535p, 651p, 751p, 844p, 951p, 1044p, 1144p
60 seconds

As coronavirus spreads throughout the country and the world, there is greater awareness of the impact it can have on the nation's prison population. Recently, a federal judge ruled that DC's Department of Corrections had to do a better job cleaning and improving conditions in its jail facilities, to limit the spread of COVID-19. Now the ACLU says even more residents have been sickened and that the protections were not enough and should not be replicated in other prison systems. WTOP reporter Neil Augenstein looked at the situation where everyone is working together to keep the inmates safe as well as the guards and workers in the prisons.

🔊 Black Lives Matter advocates for defunding police across the US as part of their calls for change.

6/8: 504a, 604a, 705a, 804a, 904a, 1004a, 1105a, 1205p, 105p, 204p, 304p, 404p, 504p, 604p, 704p, 804p, 904p, 1004p, 1104p

Following the massive protests in downtown Washington, leaders from the Black Lives Matter DC movement added the words "defund the police" to the painting the city commissioned on 16th Street back on Friday that said Black Lives Matter. This call for reform has spread across the country as BLM notes how funding has been taken from community initiatives to fund police forces across the country. The group is out with a statement critical of DC's mayor. WTOP reporter John Domen covers the story from DC.

🔊 Former Coast Guard lieutenant charged with terrorism wants sentence thrown out.

6/9: 623a, 823a, 936a, 1037a, 1144a, 1253p
60 seconds

A former Coast Guard lieutenant from Maryland was accused of plotting politically motivated killings is asking a federal appeals court to let him withdraw his guilty plea or throw out his sentence of more than 13 years in prison. His lawyer says Christopher Hasson's sentence was roughly four times longer than sentencing guidelines because the judge in the case applied a "terrorism enhancement" to the sentence. But prosecutors didn't charge Hasson with any terrorism-related offenses. Hasson was arrested and charged with planning attacks on House Speaker Nancy Pelosi among others. When investigators searched Hasson's basement apartment in Silver Spring, Maryland, they found 15 guns, including seven rifles, and more than 1,000 rounds of ammunition.

With DMV healthcare workers working harder than ever, there is greater concern for their health outside of the healthcare environment. Uber has announced it will provide 20,000 free rides for front line healthcare workers in the District. Public transportation options have shrunk during the virus. So, Uber is partnering with the District to provide free rides up to $25 to healthcare workers at the 13 hospitals including Children's National, Medstar Georgetown, and George Washington University Hospital. The ride sharing company will also be donating 1,000 free rides to the D-C Coalition Against Domestic Violence in an effort to help victims access resources, reach out for help, or plan an exit.

Amtrak continues to provide services during coronavirus despite large budget gap

April 23 • 5:42 am •

:60 seconds

With many people following advice to stay home, there is greater awareness about one of the main methods of transportation for local residents. Amtrak has seen a 95-percent decrease in ridership, and some big cuts in service due to low ridership across the country and particularly on the Northeast Corridor line that connects DC to New York. Mike Murrillo reports that Amtrak is working to decide what a return to full service will look like when they can resume services to local communities.

Empty Roads encourage dangers drivers in the DMV

May 19 • 511a, 611, 704a, 804a •

:40 seconds

There is greater awareness of drivers taking the opportunity to speed and drive faster with roads that are less congested than normal. This is a result of less drivers going into work due to the Covid 19 Virus. Maryland State police have seen a record number of traffic stops as drivers break the law on the open roads. Greg Shipley from the Maryland State Police spoke with reporter Megan Cloherty about the concerns over safety for drivers and the general public. He encouraged people to obey speed restrictions despite the empty roads.

The Dulles Greenway reopens to allow for free travel for Frontline workers

The system is planning for moving from 30 percent of normal peak service to 70-80 percent service in the next few months, as coronavirus cases have begun to edge lower. This means their employees can be safer and that Metro can begin to offer rides that are safer for commuters in the DC region. Metro rail is an essential service for thousands of the region's citizens. WTOP reporter Mike Murillo reports on the committee's progress in adding service for local commuters over the next few months.

Crime and Public Safety

🔊 Protecting Juvenile Delinquents behind bars is an important focus

April 14 • 511a, 611a, 712a, 812a, 912a, 1007a
:40 seconds

Maryland's highest court took action to protect juveniles already behind bars. The Maryland State Court of Appeals Chief Judge says lower court justices need to make the right call on whether putting a juvenile behind bars would lead to serious health risks to those kids, other inmates, staff, and the community at large in spreading the virus. If a juvenile tests positive or shows symptoms, the Chief Judge says that should be taken into consideration. She also says judges need to look into whether the Department of Juvenile Services has come up with a viable alternative option to detain or confine juveniles outside of the usual system.

🔊 Masks are now required to shop in area stores to protect against coronavirus

April 10 • 506a, 606a, 706a, 806a, 906a, 1006a, 1106a, 1206p •
:60 seconds

Coronavirus has made it important to protect one another in the community. Montgomery Maryland County health officers have begun new requirements to protect local consumers and local retail workers that may be working at grocery and pharmacy stores. The new rules require wearing a mask or face covering if one is to shop in the store, while also practicing social distancing and standing about 6 feet apart. Employees will need to wash their hands every 30 minutes as well to help prevent the spread of the virus in open spaces.

🔊 Virginia Lawmakers seek to prevent the release of an inmate contemplated due to coronavirus.

As the DMV continues through the coronavirus, the Director of Center for Infectious diseases speaks exclusively with WTOP News. As DC experiences another night of Floyd demonstrations we learn how important it is for protestors to wear masks. Clearly, it was unthinkable to have such large gatherings during the coronavirus pandemic. Dr. Anthony Fauci, a key member of the White House coronavirus task force, says it 'is' a concern for public health officials and that the protestors should get tested immediately so that we can try to protect the broader community.

🔊 Opioid related deaths in Maryland come under the spotlight even during the virus

With many restriction in place to protect citizens of our area, our region's leaders are making moves on stay-at-home orders during this coronavirus shutdown. Some areas are lengthening the stay at home orders, while others are easing. Maryland Governor Larry Hogan announced that the first phase of his plan to reopen the state that includes regulations such as: Restaurants and gyms will stay closed. Montgomery County Executive Mark Elrich believes the county is not ready to take the first step towards re-opening because of a densely-populated environment with nearly 400 COVID19 deaths. Citing a plateauing of hospitalizations and intensive care cases of covid19, Hogan said all would have to encourage social distancing, and should follow guidelines to prevent the spread of the coronavirus. Noting that cases are highest in four counties—including Prince George's and Montgomery Counties, Hogan the decision was made in consultation with health experts, and that any change in the course of the pandemic would prompt action.

Today is the day that Maryland and Virginia begin to allow SOME easing of restrictions that had to be put in place by the pandemic. But here in the DC region that easing will happen a lot slower than it is in other parts of those states ... {In Maryland, phase one of the recovery begins at 5 o'clock this evening, but some counties in this region won't be going all in, and some won't be starting at all. Stay at home orders are still in effect in Montgomery, Prince George's, and Charles Counties. In other counties retailers can start to open up again, but only at half capacity in some places, and just for curbside pickup in others. The rules for churches, as well as barbershops and salons will also vary. Most of Virginia also enters phase 1 today, but not northern Virginia region, and not the city of Richmond. However in places in between and elsewhere, restrictions on retail stores, churches, and other businesses start to loosen.

In our series Covid19 and the Class of 2020, there's a common thread among students in our area and across the country: missing out on the rites of passage in graduating from school. WTOP's Kate Ryan reports from Winchester High School in Montgomery County Maryland that local seniors are missing the face to face celebrations that they had been used to and expected. It is a challenge that local students are facing head on by being creative during this time.

CORONA VIRUS PANDEMIC

The Coronavirus pandemic has been the leading story on WTOP since the states and the district have announced the cases and deaths in March 2020. WTOP reported on all of the important news coming from the local municipalities: The District Of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. These reports are ongoing and details on these reports may be found in the body of this document. Our focus on coronavirus also included several initiatives:

Front Line Heroes Campaign

WTOP also helped the community within the context of a very exciting campaign called Frontline Heroes. Please note: Objective: From April 20 – May 31 WTOP encouraged participants to nominate a "Frontline Hero" (essential employee or emergency responder) in their life working on the frontlines of the Coronavirus pandemic. Nominations: 633 individuals participated in nominating their Frontline Hero. Monetary Awards: WTOP chose 2 individuals each day to recognize on-air, online and on social media (84 total). In total WTOP donated $8,400 to individual frontline heroes and $8,400 to Feed the Fight DC. Social media reach and impact: The campaign resulted in 26,644 page views on WTOP.com, 12,252 views, 95 clicks and 82 engagements on Facebook plus 49,912,953 impressions and 1,035 engagements on Twitter. On Air Commitment: In addition, we ran 325 :30 second promos over the course of the 6 week campaign and 294 :10 live reads on-air. This campaign was executed in partnership with Northwest Federal Credit Union. We have honored 84 individuals and all of the occupations can be found here: <https://wtop.com/contests/wtop-frontline-heroes-honorees/>

Community Call Out

Between April 1 – June 21 2020, WTOP ran 903 editions of this report from sales inventory. WTOP has been committed to helping local businesses manage the difficulties of operating during the coronavirus pandemic. "Community Call Out" was a :60 second recoded report updating the community on the status of local businesses, restaurants, charitable groups, and religious organizations during coronavirus. These messages were taken from commercial inventory and allowed organizations the opportunity to announce openings, closures, or changes in their operational structure as they were forced to react to the virus pandemic.
