Tonight on Praise: Samuel Rodriguez, Pastor, President of National Hispanic Christian Leadership Conference, and Author of his latest book "From Survive to Thrive," believes God hovers over messes and that we are at a place where we are ready to receive a word that will initiate our purpose. He shares correlations between scripture found in Genesis Chapter 1 and 1 Samuel Chapter 30, and the ruins due to the COVID-19 pandemic, political chaos, social unrest, social racial unrest, and ruins of a generation targeted with ideologies, constructs and narratives that run counter to clarity of identity that is preordained by heaven in order to confuse an entire generation to make everything relative. Pastor Rodriguez acknowledges that we have wept, but there comes a season where we need to stop weeping. With great empathy for those who have lost loved ones and for those who have been broken, Pastor Rodriguez tells us that every single person is either failing, surviving, or thriving, and God does not ignore the desperate plea of his children. We can come out of anything. He challenges us to come out of a perpetual survival mode, failure, anxiety, fear, depression, shame, and brokenness. He tells us that this season must come to an end and your now is not your next, but what you do now, what you say now, what you pray now, what you worship now, what you praise now, what you focus on now, and what you sow now, will determine what you will see next. He believes we will recover everything that was lost: our joy, peace, hope, faith, health, finances, dream, and sanity.

Tonight on Praise: Dr. Charles Stanley, Founder of In Touch Ministries and New York Times Best-Seller, shares that the title of his latest book, "Can You Still Trust God?" is a significant question and issue for many people. He reflects on the difficult circumstances we all face with the sudden changes in our country, the isolation, separation, inability to go to church, people in nursing homes and people without family being shut-in and unable to visit friends, wearing a mask, and the loss of 400,000 lives during this pandemic. Dr. Stanley shares how he has personally identified with the loss of freedom. He addresses the political contention in Georgia and tells viewers that God is still in control. Dr. Stanley encourages us to read the Bible and tells us that no matter what is going on, you can trust God.

Tonight, Grammy-award-winner, Chris Tomlin; bestselling author and pastor, Max Lucado; award-winning singer songwriter, Pat Barrett; and Grammy nominated contemporary Christian artist, We The Kingdom; come together for this special TBN Global Easter Celebration. Max Lucado, best-selling author and pastor, reads the sermon of Presbyterian pastor, Francis James Grimke, preached on November 3, 1918 after the outbreak of the Spanish Influenza Pandemic. What society faced a century ago, we face today. Max Lucado parallels the sermon with the COVID-19 Pandemic which also resulted in the closure of schools, churches, places of entertainment, an eruption of racial tension, a face-to-face encounter with disease, bias, and a reminder of the brevity of life. According to the United Kingdom's leading psychiatrists, the COVID-19 pandemic has posed the greatest threat to mental health since the second world war, with its impact to reverberate years after the crisis ends. People are worried over the uncertainty of jobs and housing, and the overall economic hardship is only going to add to the long-term effects of this pandemic. Max Lucado encourages viewers not to give up and choose instead to look up and hang on to the promises of God. This is the promise of Easter. Despair can be a dangerous season, but it can also be a faith building time in which we learn to trust God, lean into His word, and rely on his ways. The choice is ours. In difficult days depend upon our Father to help you.

CBN News Reporter Caitlin Burke Reports: COVID's one-two punch basically devastated the city of Chelsea, Massachusetts in terms of infection rates and unemployment. The city tried running a food pantry but found it wasn't the most efficient way to help needy residents. Then, city leaders launched "Chelsea Eats," a guaranteed income pilot program. Through a lottery, 2,074 low-income families were selected to receive a Visa debit card loaded with $200 to $400 a month, depending on the size of the family. Chelsea is not the first city to explore this kind of program. In fact, more than 25 mayors are all running similar pilots. They're part of a coalition called Mayors for a Guaranteed Income. A two-year guaranteed income pilot program in Stockton, California became the catalyst for this current wave of city programs. A study found the Stockton program led a reduction of month-to-month income fluctuations, increased recipients' full-time employment, and decreased feelings of anxiety and depression. Each of the current pilot programs is also under the microscope as researchers from places like Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania, try to determine if these experiments could ultimately lead to federal policy. Matt Weidinger, a research fellow in poverty studies at the American Enterprise Institute says a key question to ask for any basic income program is, who pays for it? The current programs, like Chelsea Eat's, have private donors. That wouldn't be the case, however, if this becomes national policy. Brandon Arnold, Exec. VP of the National Taxpayers Union believes some federal guaranteed income programs could be economically feasible if they were to replace one or more of the welfare programs already in place. Weidinger and Arnold stress that the key is focusing on people who need financial assistance, which isn't what they're seeing from Washington. Under the banner of "pandemic relief," Democrats have launched an experiment of their own: providing universal checks to parents. This type of initiative is known as Universal Basic Income. As part of the latest COVID stimulus, this is promoted as a new child tax credit with checks going to parents of kids over the age of 18. While this new benefit is only covered for a year, the White House and congressional Democrats want the policy to be made permanent. Weidinger says once Universal Basic Income, or UBI, is made available for parents, everyone else will want a piece of the action. Some of those potential policymakers include Vice President Kamala Harris, who as a Senator, last year, introduced legislation calling for monthly "pandemic payments" of $2,000 for each adult and up to three children in a household. Former presidential candidate Andrew Yang, who is now running for New York mayor, pitched $1,000 monthly checks for every American adult, no matter their income. The idea of any sort of guaranteed income was once considered radical, but these new programs signal a potential shift in the way the US approaches alleviating poverty.

CBN News Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: When public schools shut down last year millions of homes became virtual classrooms. Students became anxious, disinterested, and isolated; unable to truly interact with friends and teachers. Many say the result led to a pandemic within a pandemic as some kids struggled to find answers or a way out. Heathyr Sidle and Michael Myronuk have fond memories of their 14-year-old son Michael Jr. Then last October tragedy struck when Michael Jr. committed suicide. Sidle recalled the moment she learned about her son's suicide shortly after leaving him at his dad's. An honor student who had just transitioned to high school, Michael's parents said he struggled with virtual learning when COVID shut down his school. Unfortunately, this family isn't alone as medical and education experts continue to warn about the negative impact of school closures. According to Mental Health America, 2020's rate of children ages 11 through 17 screened for anxiety and depression, jumped nine percent over the previous year. CDC(<http://https://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/volumes/69/wr/mm6945a3.htm>). data also shows emergency room treatment for kids with mental health conditions skyrocketed from April to October last year. But Sidle said that her faith in God makes the difference in helping her deal with the loss of her son. Michael's parents now want to use their loss to help raise awareness about teen depression and suicide. They recently launched the Arrow of Light Foundation in their son's honor. Meanwhile, Sidle said that although her son is no longer with her here, she plans to keep fighting for other kids and parents. If you or someone you know needs help call the National Suicide Prevention Hotline at 800-273-8255.

CBN News Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The Biden administration hopes to pass a plan that it says will keep people out of nursing homes. Approximately 180,000 Americans died from COVID-19 in nursing homes. The Biden plan hopes to increase access to in-home care which would allow people to receive help taking care of themselves in the comfort of their own homes rather than moving to a group home. The plan would cost about $400 billion and makes up approximately one-fifth of the president's massive infrastructure spending plan. The money would go towards providing in-home care to low-income individuals and people with disabilities who qualify for Medicaid. While Medicaid already covers the cost of both nursing home and in-home care, there's a sticking point in the form of an approximately three-year waiting list for in-home care in most states. That means Medicaid recipients who can't wait that long for in-home care end up in nursing homes instead. The Biden plan hopes to change that by increasing the number of in-home workers and their salaries. Brian Weinstein, executive director of the Virginia Beach branch of Visiting Angels, one of America's largest home care providers, told CBN News the demand for in-home care continues to increase as the population ages. Eventually, most seniors will need help with everyday tasks like bathing, cooking, and taking medications. According to AARP, 53 million seniors get the help they need at home from relatives who report the amount of time they spend caring for their loved ones averages 24 hours a week, at an out-of-pocket cost of approximately $7,000 a year, to say nothing of the emotional toll. Professional home care providers are paid in various ways, including private long-term care insurance, Veterans Administration benefits, personal savings, and Medicaid. The government-funded senior health insurance program Medicare, however, provides very little for in-home care and the Biden plan appears to keep it that way. In addition to denying service to people who don't qualify for Medicaid, critics argue the Biden in-home care plan doesn't fit the traditional definition of infrastructure. Robert Moffit, a senior fellow in Health Policy Studies at The Heritage Foundation, told CBN News the expensive in-home care plan will have a tough time winning approval. Details determine everything in health policy, and so far, this plan lacks specifics. So while it's clear American people with disabilities and low-income seniors need help at home, it remains to be seen whether Congress sees fit to spend hundreds of billions more on top of what the government already provides.

CBN News Reporter Jenna Browder Reports: More states and cities are opening up in the United States as coronavirus numbers decline and vaccinations increase. Nearly one-third of Americans are fully vaccinated, and nearly half have received at least one shot. Health experts say that's good news because the vaccines should protect from the new, highly transmissible Indian variant. The "617 variant" has already been identified in three states and beginning today, the US will ban travel from India by non-US citizens. Meanwhile, the US and other countries are rushing in aid as hospitals in India continue to see staggering numbers. On Tuesday, India reported 357,229 new cases in the past 24 hours and 3,449 deaths from COVID-19. Back in the US, the demand for shots is way down, dropping 26 percent in the last three weeks to 2.4 million doses a day. That's a cause for concern for health experts. Still, the average number of daily cases is steadily dropping, now under 50,000 for the first time since October. More cities and states are lifting restrictions. The governors of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut are allowing more businesses to fully open on May 19th. With many people getting vaccinated, there's an ongoing debate over mask mandates, especially outdoors. One Oregon high school adjusting its policy after a runner wearing a mask collapsed at the finish line. Florida is suspending all Covid-related public health orders statewide. And today, Oklahoma is expected to follow suit by withdrawing its state of emergency.

CBN News Reporter Caitlin Burke Reports: New guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control say fully vaccinated people can now safely participate in most indoor and outdoor activities without wearing a mask or social distancing. President Biden called the news a "great milestone." He credited the massive campaign to quickly vaccinate the American public. To date, more than 154 million Americans have received at least one dose of a COVID-19 vaccine – about 47 percent of the population. Dr. Walensky says the new guidance about masks is based on science. Evidence shows the vaccine is strongly protective, even against mutations of the virus. Still, there are some exceptions to the CDC's new recommendations. Masks are still required for anyone riding on buses, trains, or planes, and in hospitals. Experts acknowledge these guidelines are based on the honor system and that there is no failsafe way to prove who is vaccinated and who is not. According to a new AP-NORC poll, a wide variety of Americans from different backgrounds have questions and hesitations about the vaccines. A large number of those who remain unvaccinated in the U.S. say they would need to hear their concerns addressed by a credible source before feeling comfortable with the shot. Kizzmekia Corbett is hoping to be that person, especially for the Black community. She helped lead the development of the Moderna vaccine and now spends hours giving plain-spoken answers to counter misinformation. For example, Corbett told AP that while clinical trials may have seemed fast to outsiders, scientists have been working on vaccines for earlier cousins of COVID-19 for the last six years. COVID-19 deaths in the U.S. are now at the lowest level in 10 months, a milestone health experts say would not have been possible without the vaccines.

Tonight on A21 Biblical Justice: Join Christine Caine, Founder of A21, as she talks about God's view of justice and the part we play in it. Today, we look at one of the most horrific injustices and violations of human rights, human trafficking. Human trafficking is the exploitation of vulnerable people for their bodies and labor. It's modern-day slavery, and while it takes many forms, it's the same crime. It is happening on a massive scale in every community in the world, including our own. We learn how human trafficking happens and its devastating impact in the lives of those men, women, and children. The good news is there are effective strategies to combat human trafficking and to restore survivors to freedom and independence.

On today's episode of Treasures, Sonny Arguinzi, Founder of Victory Outreach International, introduces us to Lisa, a former prostitute. She shares how she became a prostitute and how God set her free from that bondage. Prostitution is widely considered the world's oldest profession. Women find themselves in brothels, hotels, and even street corners, facing dangers daily. Most of these women were pulled into this lifestyle at a young age. People may ask the question, "Why don't these women just walk away?" While it may be easier for some than others, many have been trapped into this lifestyle through sex trafficking and various situations with no way out. The answer is Jesus. He is able to deliver them and set them free.

CBN News Reporter Caitlin Burke Reports: The recent wave of ransomware attacks against the U.S. serves as a sobering reminder that no industry is off-limits and no protection is bulletproof. Recent targets include a global meat producer, a key gas pipeline, hospitals, and dozens of government agencies. In a ransomware attack, hackers gain access to a computer system and disrupt or completely lock out users until a ransom is paid. Historically, private companies pay the money quickly and quietly. For other victims, that's not always an option. In early 2020, Kimberly LaGrue, the chief information officer for the city of New Orleans, led a complete infrastructure rebuild after a hacker attacked and the city refused to pay. As with many attacks, the hackers likely gained access through either outdated infrastructure, or a user not taking appropriate precautions. The attack on New Orleans had the capability to completely interrupt or halt government operations. Fortunately, response teams had planned for that type of disaster. Those plans allowed her team to move quickly, with money its cyber insurance policy, to further update and secure systems. Still, LaGrue says the city must remain vigilant. Frank Gaffney, with the Center for Security Policy, has raised flags about critical infrastructure vulnerabilities for decades – specifically the U.S. power grid. He says that threat goes way beyond these ransom-style attacks. With this recent wave of attacks, he hopes action will finally be taken to harden the grid and protect other critical infrastructure. Action, he believes, could ultimately save the lives of tens of millions of Americans. The reality is, America is under attack from a number of sides, and it's the very connectivity we rely on every day that makes us most vulnerable.

CBN News Reporter Jenna Browder Reports: From coast to coast, violent crime is rising in American cities. In just one recent weekend more than 120 Americans were killed in shootings. In the Bronx, surveillance footage shows a 10-year-old girl and her little brother caught in the crossfire of a shooting. Both children are okay, but police are still looking for the shooter. In another part of New York, family and friends remembered Justin Wallace, a ten-year-old who was shot and killed in what police believe was an argument between adults over parking. And in Detroit, mourners held a vigil for a two-year-old killed last week. It's a pattern across the country. Homicide rates in large cities rose more than 30 percent on average last year and climbed another 24 percent for the beginning of this year. This issue of rising crime has quickly become a political one as seen in a recent survey by YouGov: Asked which issues were "very big problems," 49 percent of Americans place violent crime at the top of the list compared to 39 percent for the economy with COVID-19 coming in at just 32 percent. Conservatives and Republicans blame Democratic leadership in big cities and movements like "Defund the Police" for the rising crime and they're likely to use it as election fodder in the 2022 midterms. Hoping to get ahead of that and what could be serious political peril for his party, President Biden is launching an effort to head off violent crime. His anti-crime strategy will focus on gun crimes and homicides. Regarding the "Defund the Police" movement, a recent report commissioned by Democrats shows it hurt the party which lost significant ground in the House of Representatives in 2020.

Every night in America, over 500,000 people sleep on the streets without a roof over their head. Millions more are homeless without a place to call their own. While homelessness is caused by many factors, in a nation where home ownership should be attainable by any citizen, this is not the case. Many people have given up on the American dream of owning a home. The reasons are many and complicated. Taking Care of Business examines our nation's housing dilemma.

CBN News Reporter Jennifer Wishon Reports: As more Americans venture out to shop, dine, and travel, they're being met by higher prices caused by inflation for a wide variety of products. Unlike a year ago, your supermarket is likely fully stocked with toilet paper. That's a relief. But now it's costing you more. Kimberly-Clark, which makes Kleenex and Scott Toilet Paper, says it's raising prices on 60-percent of its products. Proctor & Gamble is hiking prices on its baby, feminine, and adult care lines. Overall consumers are paying 5-percent more over the past year with raw materials needed to make common items costing more and as supply struggles to meet demand in the rapidly reopening economy. On the grocery aisles, General Mills is considering raising prices to cover increased costs of grain and sugar. Skippy Peanut Butter costs more. Coca-Cola plans to raise prices too. The service industry is also struggling to keep up with vigorous new consumer demand. Airline fares rose 7-percent last month after jumping more than 10-percent in April. Restaurants are marking up prices too to make up for higher wages they're now paying to either keep or attract workers. Federal Reserve officials maintain inflation is temporary and will drop off after supply rises to meet demand. Other economists predict we're currently at the peak of inflation and can expect it to start to recede as soon as next month. Still, some economists fear inflation could remain higher for a longer time than officials expect. But for now, most don't believe that's likely.

CBN News Reporter Jennifer Wishon Reports: If there's one thing that makes American sit up and take notice it's when gas prices and other energy costs go up. President Biden wants to reach net-zero emissions across the economy by 2050 which means transforming America's energy market and, some fear, making the U.S. more dependent on China. This aggressive energy policy targets fossil fuels with the goal of making America 100% carbon pollution-free over the next 15 years. It includes plans for more windmills, billions to build new energy-efficient housing, and a national network of charging stations to encourage more American to buy electric vehicles. But his critics don't buy it. Add that to cities like San Francisco, Denver, and New York proposing or passing measures banning the use of fossil fuels in new homes and buildings. In response, a number of states are outlawing bans over fear they would drive up energy bills, require expensive appliance conversions, and leave Americans without any alternative during major outages like many Texans experienced last winter. While seen as an energy saver, electric vehicles remain more expensive than their gas-drinking cousins and have been slow to take off in the U.S. Along with more charging stations, Biden wants taxpayers to spend $174 billion on incentives for people to buy electric vehicles like Ford's new F-150 Lightning. However, these landmark proposals could make America even more dependent on China. In 2019, the communist regime provided the U.S. with 80% of its rare earth imports – elements needed to manufacture batteries, wind turbines, and solar panels. In fact, of the 35 minerals deemed critical by the Departments of Defense and Interior, China is the top global supplier for 23. Today China boasts 107 battery factories with 53 actively producing. The U.S. has nine and just three are active. However, now Biden must follow Trump's lead in trying to strengthen energy supply chains here at home. He's directed the Energy Department to light a fire on battery research, manufacturing, and processing.

CBN News Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Davis Professional Services in Chesapeake, Virginia specializes in cleaning commercial properties and feels the impact of the labor shortage in America. For more than 25 years, Flug has run his janitorial company, then the pandemic hit, causing him to lose about 25% of the business. As the company rebounds, more workers are needed. Across the country businesses are emerging from the pandemic in the face of a labor shortage, especially in the service industry. According to the Economic Policy Institute, child-care issues and ongoing fears about the pandemic are somewhat to blame. But many say enhanced unemployment benefits are also keeping the unemployment rolls at 9.8 million – about 3.6 million higher than before the pandemic. Employers say the federal $300 weekly unemployment benefits are giving people a reason to decline work. That's why more than 20 states are ending the federal benefit that Congress enacted during the pandemic to support people when the economy shut down because many have been receiving more income from unemployment than their previous work. Keri Terray, who manages human resources at Davis, says with so many job openings workers are weighing their options. That includes re-hiring former employees. Flug has even rolled up his sleeves to help make up the slack. Meanwhile, Flug says he is hopeful that business will soon return to normal.

Tonight on Praise, Jentezen Franklin, seen on Kingdom Connection on TBN, and Author of his new book, Acres of Diamonds, shares that typically in a crisis we want to blame someone. This must stop. It is okay to be down, just don't stay there. God can use sinners and failures, but He cannot use quitters. One of the greatest things we can learn from this crisis is to learn how to encourage yourself, read your Bible, and worship. There is something about anointed worship that can bring deliverance and help to your life. Know that God is with you. God is at the bottom, no matter how far down you go. God has given every man a measure of faith, which means anything you face in life God has given you enough faith to overcome that situation. Love, comfort, and pray for one another. Jentezen prays a prayer of blessing for the viewers.

Tonight on Praise: Erwin McManus, Senior Pastor of Mosaic Church in Los Angeles, and his son, Aaron McManus, Campus Pastor of Mosaic Venice, discuss compassion fatigue in response to the anxiety, depression, and frustration resulting from crisis after crisis over the past year. We've faced issues such as Asian hate, George Floyd and Black Lives Matter, Police overuse of force, and a disproportionate amount of people of color who experience a negative side of law enforcement. Erwin believes that sometimes the agenda can be right but the motivation is wrong. Part of the problem with compassion fatigue is that we're identifying problem after problem after problem rather than pointing people to solution after solution after solution. Problems we don't have the power to change. The real issue is the human heart. Jesus solves the human problem one person at a time. We should have empathy for others as much as possible, however, compassion requires action. The problem with social media is that it creates a pretension of action. We have a generational challenge or crisis that it is more important to be known than it is to be worth knowing. Ask yourself, is my life, my actions, my social media, more driven to be known or to be worth knowing? Creating awareness is a positive thing and your voice is important, but words without action eventually become mirages and illusions. Ask yourself, ten years from now where will I be on this issue? We should celebrate everyone who is giving their life to make the world a better place.

Today on The Eric Metaxas Radio Show, Louie Giglio, Global Pastor of Passion City Church, shares his new book, "Don't Give the Enemy a Seat at Your Table" and talks about changing the way we think. Pastor Giglio tells us that fear is the number one debilitating thing in humanity right now. The antidote to fear is not courage, but faith. Faith is the confidence that God is in it with me. It's taking control of the thought. God has given us the ability to take control of our thinking by the power of Christ in us. We can change the way we think. Pastor Giglio talks about how over a decade ago he struggled with anxiety and depression. He says if we commit to the process of renewing our mind, that process scientifically works. We need to take mental health more seriously. If you need help, get help.

CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Do you feel tired all the time? If so, you're not alone. Too many of us feel sluggish because we consume too many unhealthy foods and drinks. Other lifestyle choices can add to the problem. Over time the problem has gotten worse, according to best-selling author Dr. Steven Gundry who says certain energy traps rob us of our vitality and cause us to feel sick and tired most days, which is a threat to our health. In his book "The Energy Paradox: What to Do When Your Get-Up-and Go Has Got Up and Gone," Dr. Gundry describes the changes to our modern lifestyle that have led to increased tiredness, moodiness, brain fog, or weight gain. Dr Gundry says the primary cause of our low energy stems from an unhealthy gut. He said too many of us lack the good bacteria, called probiotics, that are necessary to adequately power our bodies. Probiotics can be consumed in a number of ways, such as supplements, foods like yogurt and kimchi as well as beverages like kombucha. Additionally, those bacteria need to flourish by eating fiber-rich foods called prebiotics. Prebiotics can be consumed in supplement form and in many fiber-rich foods like fresh vegetables such as asparagus, onions, dandelion greens, and broccoli. Dr. Gundry went on to explain that an unhealthy gut often leaks, thereby further depleting our body's energy reserves. That's the condition where holes develop in the thin lining of the gut, allowing food and proteins to escape. When that happens, it causes an immune reaction, which triggers inflammation, a process that drains huge amounts of our precious energy. Dr. Gundry says unhealthy foods such as sugar and processed foods can harm the gut. Dr. Gundry says too many medications can also harm the gut, particularly antibiotics. Furthermore, Dr. Gundry warns about eating foods that have been given these drugs. In order to feel energetic during the day, we need a good night's sleep. However, blue light coming from our electronics can keep us from falling asleep. Dr. Gundry recommends turning them off hours before bedtime or at night, wearing glasses that block the blue light. Dr. Gundry warns against taking certain heartburn and acid indigestion medications longer than two weeks. Dr. Gundry says people suffering from low energy usually need more Vitamin D. He recommends a 5,000 IU daily supplement and more time outside.

CBN News Reporter Paul Strand Reports: Dr. Matthew Sleeth saw thousands of suicide attempts during his many years overseeing emergency rooms and departments. Now as a Christian author and founder of Blessed Earth(<http://www.blessedearth.org/>), he's out to arm his brothers and sisters in Christ with the knowledge they need to fight a sudden surge in suicides. With 1,500,000 Americans likely to try killing themselves this year, Sleeth believes many of them could be talked back from the brink. The suicide rate is now as bad as the other worst time in America for people killing themselves, the Great Depression. But Sleeth says it would be much higher than the present roughly 14 out of 100,000 people without the many modern medical advances thwarting so many of today's suicide attempts. In "Hope Always: How You Can Be a Force for Life in a Culture of Suicide," Sleeth suggests so many people don't want to live because we're creating a world that's unlivable. And he sees much hopelessness in an America leaving the spiritual behind. Some say the Bible actually condones suicide, citing Samson bringing the Pharisees' temple down upon himself and his captors or King Saul falling on his sword or even Jesus Christ letting Himself be crucified. Faith got Job through Satan's many efforts to get him to kill himself and Jesus countered the devil with Scripture. Those two, Faith and Scripture, are available to everyone, and they do actually shield people. More than just rest in that protection, though, Sleeth advocates Christians learn to see warning signs of suicide and learn how to protect people contemplating it. . . how to ask them if they are thinking about it. It's rare, though we'll find ourselves in a situation that dire. But there are good actions for us to take even if we aren't face-to-face with someone actively thinking of killing themselves. The author also suggested people of faith need to keep lines of communication about this subject open. Here's a way to back off from the edge if you or someone you know is feeling desperate. Slow down and do what Sleeth calls the HALT check. In this case, HALT is an acronym for: Hungry Angry Lonely Tired. It's especially important to teach this to young folks in your life because without taking the time to cool off and do a HALT check, they are particularly vulnerable to doing something rash quickly. Maybe one of the reasons for the soaring suicide rate is people being stressed out by a world that just keeps racing faster and faster, leaving many of us without a day of real downtime. . . a Sabbath. Sleeth's final words and the message "Hope Always" is that you actually can save the lives of those thinking of taking theirs. You can move them back from that deadly cliff.

CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Macaroni and cheese, hot fudge sundaes and other comfort foods have become our go-to fixes during the pandemic to help brighten our days and soothe a lonely night. Unfortunately, what's in these guilty pleasures can make blue moods and other mental health problems worse, not better, as researchers continue to discover a link between what we eat and how we feel. The number of Americans seeking help for depression and anxiety skyrocketed 93-percent in 2020 compared to 2019. While some of that can be blamed on the COVID-19 impact, research shows mental illness has steadily increased for years. In fact, 40 million Americans deal with some mental health concern. That's more than the populations of New York and Florida combined. These disorders make the list of the most common cause of death and disability. Suicide scores as a leading cause of death no matter the age group. Meanwhile, three out of four Americans are either overweight or obese – the highest level ever. As it turns out, there's a link between the skyrocketing weight gain and the sharp increase in mental health problems, according to Niadoo and a growing number of mental health experts. The same foods that trigger weight gain can also lead to depression, anxiety, and other mental health issues. Dr. Naidoo founded and directs the first hospital-based Nutritional Psychiatry Service in the United States. She is the Director of Nutritional and Lifestyle Psychiatry at Massachusetts General Hospital while serving on the faculty at Harvard Medical School. She is the author of the book, "This is Your Brain on Food: An Indispensable Guide to the Surprising Foods that Fight Depression, Anxiety, PTSD, OCD, ADHD, and More." As a result, Dr. Naidoo is one of a growing number of psychiatrists and other mental health professionals using healthy foods to treat their patients. Dr. Naidoo says a healthy brain begins with a healthy gut. That key connection, the gut-brain axis, is a two-way superhighway sending constant chemical messaging back and forth via the vagus nerve. The chemicals, for better or worse, are determined by the type of bacteria, good or bad, found in the gut. Several studies including MRI imaging that shows excessive sugar consumption makes depression and anxiety worse. Dr. Naidoo says processed foods are loaded with sugar, even those that don't seem sweet. Believe it or not, many fake sugars are just as bad for the gut or in some cases worse than real sugar. Dr. Naidoo recommends adding colorful vegetables, like leafy greens to your menu, which contain folate. She advises her patients to load up on antioxidant-rich foods like blueberries and green tea. She tells her psychiatric patients to eat plenty of healthy fats like olive oils, avocados, and things like salmon and walnuts which contain high levels of Omega-3 fats. Dr. Naidoo believes in addition to relieving depression and anxiety, that this approach can also have a positive impact on Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder (OCD), Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), Schizophrenia, Bi-Polar Disorder and other mental health challenges. An added benefit is that a healthy diet can also increase a medication's effectiveness. In her book, "This is Your Brain on Food: An Indispensable Guide to the Surprising Foods that Fight Depression, Anxiety, PTSD, OCD, ADHD, and More," Dr. Naidoo lists specific foods that alleviate certain mental health problems. She also provides dozens of recipes that address specific mental health challenges.

He talks about the history of racial division in Tulsa and 2021 being the 100th year of the Tulsa race massacre. He shares how his pastor, a white gentleman, established Greenwood Christian Center on Greenwood Street and later asked him to become the lead pastor. He expresses the importance of focusing on our purpose rather than our potential; being faithful in what is before us today, because it opens the door for tomorrow; and that all we have is all we need. He tells us the ultimate truth is the word of God concerning our marriage, how to raise a family, manage finances, race relations, etc. All of our relationships need to be certified by the manufacturer. He encourages us to go back to the originator of all our relationships, aim at a relationship with Him and make that our goal, and out of that relationship all our other relationships will actual be able to win.

She wrote her recent book "Everything Will Be Okay Life Lessons for Young Women (from a Former Young Woman)" in response to the hunger for advice by young women. While young women today are ambitious, talented, educated, they are also extremely worried. Dana explains, what she calls a quarter life crisis, is when you're twenty-five and nothing is turning out the way you thought it would, or you hoped it would, and you start re-thinking a lot of things. All that anxiety is following young women into their thirties and beyond. In her book she shares how to improve your day at the office; how to get a better raise, promotion, or a different job; and how to become a leader and a manager, but also how to find some balance and serenity. Dana tells us that she has to rely on her faith to believe everything will be okay because ultimately, if you believe, it is going to be okay. She shares that choosing to be loved is not a career limiting decision and tells how she met her husband along with various stories of her experiences in the white house.

CBN News Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Pro-lifers are responding to the effort by the president of Planned Parenthood to distance the organization from the racist views of its founder. Many are calling the leader's words about Margaret Sanger "empty," contending that many of the abortion giant's current practices remain racist. Alexis McGill Johnson, president and CEO of the nation's largest abortion provider used the New York Times as the forum to admit the racism of its founder. Yet in her own words, Sanger strived for a society that limited births to only those she deemed fit to have children. Many cite a 1923 New York Times interview in which she called some groups of people, "human weeds," as proof of her racist motives. According to data from the Centers for Disease Control, in 2016, non-Hispanic black women had the highest abortion rate, 25.1 abortions per 1,000 women aged 15-44 years. And a survey by Protecting Black Life found that 79 percent of Planned Parenthood's facilities are in communities of color. Alveda King, niece of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., and president of Priests for Life, says Johnson's words are misleading. Former NFL player Benjamin Watson and Vice President of the pro-life group Human Coalition, said if Planned Parenthood really wants to change it should take the next step. It is a move that King added is not likely to happen. Meanwhile, CBN News reached out to Planned Parenthood in an attempt to speak with Alexis McGill Johnson about this stance, but at the time of this publication, we did not receive a response.

CBN News Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: Phone video of attacks against Jews in cities across the U.S. shared on social media shows how Palestinian supporters are bringing war against Israel and against Jews to America's streets. Jews around the world know from experience that when Israel is attacked and fights back, they become even bigger targets for antisemitic violence. A Jewish man was savagely beaten in New York's Diamond District. Another in Times Square. In Los Angeles, a man is being held on suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon after an antisemitic attack on Jewish diners. Ten cars full of Palestinian supporters rolled up and tried to attack them as they ate outside in Beverly Hills. Police are investigating the incident as a hate crime. In Canada, a Jew was seen being chased in broad daylight. In Florida, a pro-Palestinian caravan displayed the words, "Hitler was right." And in Hallandale Beach, Florida, a man yelled antisemitic remarks at a rabbi in front of a synagogue. He later returned so he could dump a bag of human feces in front of the building while shouting, "Jews should die!" The Anti-Defamation League has documented antisemitism on multiple social media platforms, including 17,000 tweets that used variations of the phrase, "Hitler was right," and 193 antisemitic incidents in the week after the fighting in the Middle East began. Rabbi Cooper says statements by Palestinian supporters in the Democrat Party embolden anti-Semites. Cooper also said it's imperative that Christians stand by Jews and speak out strongly against the attacks and that the White House must do more to stop it.

CBN News Reporter Eric Philips Reports: As the temperature of the nation remains heated after police shootings involving black individuals, we are taking a close look at a new black militia group that has emerged. While the group calls for peace and justice, it does so while being heavily armed. Even with three guilty verdicts against one of the officers charged in George Floyd's death, some say black Americans continue to feel threatened. In fact, black gun ownership has increased 60 percent according to the National Shooting Sports Foundation, and it's believed to be in response to continued violence impacting that community. Another response is a black militia called the NFAC, the "Not F-ing Around Coalition." CBN News spoke to NFAC's founder John Johnson. Johnson, better known by his former DJ name, Grandmaster Jay, is the supreme commander of the NFAC. Founded in 2020, Johnson claims the NFAC has become a global force, helping push the investigations into the killings of Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor. DePaul University Professor Thomas Mikaitis told NBC News he thinks the NFAC is different from far-right militias, some whom were involved in the Capitol breach on January 6. CBN News asked the FBI about the NFAC. Officials said they have no comment, adding that the FBI does not investigate groups and that their investigations focus solely on criminal activity. According to Johnson, his group has a few main goals: to protect and police the black community, to underscore the right of Black Americans to bear arms. Dr. Judson Jeffries is Professor of African American Studies at the Ohio State University. Andrew Brown, MaKhia Bryant, Daunte Wright, Adam Toledo – all black, all shot to death by police in the weeks surrounding the verdict. But that's why the NFAC has emerged, Johnson says, to try to give justice a nudge. And while 18-year-olds can join up, the NFAC is built on a military structure and tends to target mature members in their 40s, 50s and 60s, some of them veterans. Johnson says there is also extensive training. Those words spoken before Johnson himself was arrested and federally indicted for allegedly pointing an AR platform rifle at an FBI agent and other law enforcement officers during a Breonna Taylor Protest, something he aggressively denies, asserting he was targeted because of who he is. Still, that has not taken the steam out of the NFAC's mission. While Johnson says the group is not political, it is interesting to note that he himself ran for President as an independent candidate in 2016. Johnson maintains the group is about justice, and not revenge – the key being justice operates within the confines of the law. He says he insists on the NFAC being a law abiding organization.

CBN News Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: Parents across the country are surprised and angry that Critical Race Theory is being taught to their public school children, often without any discussion. And a growing number want it stopped. But a new poll shows most Americans oppose critical race theory, and at least 22 states have either introduced legislation to ban it or have already banned it. Critical Race Theory, which is rooted in Marxism, says racism exists everywhere and that whites will always be racist. In his new book Fault Lines, Pastor Voddie Baucham calls the new anti-racism movement, of which critical race theory is at the center, "a cult." CRT has spread quickly from academia to corporate America, the military, and even churches, but opposition to it is growing.
