Detailed Description: A new law requires all commercial buildings to have a working carbon monoxide detector by June. The Steve Nelson law went into effect last year, after a carbon monoxide leak killed the Long Island food manager and made 30 others sick. The installation can cost anywhere between $2,500 to $250,000. All new buildings constructed this year will need to have a monitored carbon monoxide detector. Any built before 2016 can still buy plug-in detectors.
