Topics: Hurricane Safety & Preparedness

Guests: Christian Smith from the American Red Cross

Duration: 25:32

I wanted to have Christian Smith come back on and do a review. We first started off talking about what we discussed last year (she quizzed me and I didn't do too well...I should have studied, but I have never been the best at pop quizzes). We talked about how to keep your life together and stay prepared for when a hurricane hits. For example – make a photocopy of all of your important documents such as: social security cards, insurance papers, birth certificates, etc. and put them in a ziplock bag.

Ravaged Puerto Rico: Here's how to help after hurricane

September 26, 2017 12:58 AM

Updated: September 26, 2017 12:56 AM

Duration: 5:00

Associate Press

NEW YORK - Hurricane Maria has devastated Puerto Rico, destroying buildings leaving its more than 3.4 million residents largely without power. Food and drinking water are also difficult to come by, and the recovery will be long, difficult and expensive.

While the urge to donate clothes and other supplies is natural, money is the best way to contribute during times of disaster, charities and philanthropy experts say. That's not to say there's never a time and place for supplies. Diapers, for example, are often requested. And donating directly through a website gets money to a charity faster than a text donation, even though the text might seem easier. Puerto Rico's first lady, Beatriz Rossello, has launched an emergency fund with help from private companies. United for Puerto Rico (Unidos Por Puerto Rico) lets you donate through PayPal or directly to its bank account.

Subject: Jacksonville Mayor's $1.27 billion budget includes 100 more officers, infrastructure boost

Duration: 4 minutes

Jacksonville, FL - It's a plan that comes in at $1.27 billion.

Jacksonville Mayor Lenny Curry is again pushing to invest in public safety, with his new City budget proposal asking for 100 more JSO officers and 42 more JFRD firefighter positions, in addition to $24.5 million for their vehicles.

"This is an investment that we have to make as a community," Curry says.

The prior two budgets have each authorized more Jacksonville Sheriff's Office hires and rebuilt the Community Service Officer program. If the proposed hires are approved, it would put JSO back near where it used to be during peak staffing, when Jacksonville was making gains on fighting violent crime. There's no clear timeline yet for how quickly the officers would be recruited, trained, and put on the streets, if Curry's recommendations are approved.

Topic: Project Cold Case – Unsolved murders in Jacksonville

Guest: Ryan Backmann

Duration: 25 minutes, 31 seconds

Ryan and I discussed his father's unsolved murder case and how it led to him starting Project Cold Case. This organization is a support system for families after the police have exhausted all leads and the cases have gone "cold". The organization helps raise awareness for each case submitted to them, helps grieving families understand all the legal processes and educates them on all the resources that are available to them. Project Cold Case takes submissions from all over the country but focuses the most on Jacksonville, where many their contacts and resources are. There are over 1,200 unsolved murders in Jacksonville alone so the organization is kept busy just focusing on our city.
