- b. Length: 2hr

In the grander scheme of things, Argo blames the more defined disparity between the far ends of left and right-wing politics since the Trump administration.

C. What the film Master teaches us about the tendency of racist microaggressions to boil over into flat-out aggression

- a. Air Dates: 8/10/22
- b. Length: 60 minutes
- c. Description: Hank Mellowish and Cully Cooper discuss the much-maligned film Master, released earlier this year, and how its far bleaker portrayal of racism that those of Jordan Peele makes it a difficult watch. They discuss the harm in compounding microaggressions and the duty all people have to speak up when they see injustice occurring.

D. The importance of representation in discussion of the 1980's comedy Real Genius

- a. Air Dates: 9/21/22
- b. Length: 60 minutes
- c. Description: Cully Cooper and Hank Mellowish of Reel Live discuss the cult-classic Real Genius, and specifically its kindness in its portrayal of the “nerd” archetype. They discuss the problematic prototypical bursts of marginalized individuals onto the film scene, discussing Blacksploitation in the case of Black Americans, the early films of John Waters in the case of the LGBT community, and the now-reviled Revenge of the Nerds in the case of academic types. While it hasn’t often been discussed, the two come to the conclusion that these confrontational films make a great case for the importance of entering the arena in direct opposition to the mainstream’s terms. The exploitation of citizens by the military industrial complex is also discussed.
