The Jesuit Volunteer Corps Experience: The Jesuit Volunteer Corps is celebrating its 60th anniversary this year. It is one of a number of denomination- and church-related service organizations that gives young college graduates a chance to change their lives by living simply in community with one another and by serving those in need. Correspondent Deborah Potter reports on one JVC group in Scranton, Pennsylvania, where the volunteers describe how their experience of life together and work with those who are poor, sick, or hungry has affected them. “I see the presence of God in all of my clients so profoundly,” says one volunteer. “You’re told that you have Christ inside us, but I never actually saw it until I came here.”

Christian Healthcare Sharing: There are a number of Christian healthcare sharing ministries throughout the US. Unlike traditional insurance companies, they collect monthly dues and then distribute the money to subscribers who have medical bills to pay. Correspondent Lucky Severson reports on these programs and visits with members of one, Samaritan Ministries, that covers more than 60,000 families or 200,000 people, who all contribute to a common fund and then share their medical costs.

Candidates Reach Out to Evangelicals: With evangelicals—a mainstay of the Republican coalition—divided over whether to support Donald Trump, Kim Lawton reports that both Trump and Hillary Clinton reached out to that community through video messages to an important Latino evangelical conference. Lawton looks at how Trump is ramping up efforts to secure evangelical support and interviews Trump campaign liaison Frank Amedia, a religious broadcaster and pastor of Touch Heaven Ministries in Ohio.
