Title: FOX 29 Salutes the Military

Issue: Military

Description of program:

This annual FOX 29 event brings all the branches of our military together with first responders. The street in front of the station is closed down for a block party and each branch of the military brings an interactive exhibit to share with viewers, many of whom are local school students. Representatives from Homeland Security, the Police and Fire Departments and support organizations like the USO and Wounded Warriors are also in attendance. Viewers are invited to attend and bring photos of their loved ones who have served or are currently serving in the military. We also invite Veterans to attend and talk to them about their service.

14TH STREET RALLY

City transit advocates are up in arms Monday after a judge put a stop to a big part of the 14th Street busway plan. New York City's Department of Transportation wanted to restrict traffic on 14th Street, only allowing buses, while repairs continue on the L train's Canarsie Tunnel. A court ruling temporarily halted the plan after neighbors sued, claiming the move would make traffic a nightmare in the area. As a result, drivers are still using the street between Third and Ninth Avenues.

NYC AMONG WORST RUN CITIES

While Mayor Bill de Blasio has been vying for votes on the presidential campaign trail, Wallethub has ranked New York City as one of the worst-run cities in the U.S. for the third time in a row. The website conducted a study in which it compared 150 of the largest cities across six categories: financial stability, education, infrastructure and pollution, health, safety and economy. The study averaged these metrics to create a "quality of city services" score, which was then divided by the total city budget per capita for the rankings. New York placed 146 out of 150 with the city's overall score, which is actually an improvement from the ranking of 148 for the past two years.

Scantily clad "bikini baristas" in Everett, Washington, will have to cover up more of themselves after a federal appeals court on Wednesday freed the city to enforce a dress code requiring that they clothe "minimum body areas" when serving coffee to customers. The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Seattle ruled 3-0 against the owner and five baristas at Hillbilly Hotties, a chain of drive-up coffee stands, by lifting a lower court injunction against both the dress code and a related ordinance that expanded Everett's definition of "lewd" conduct.

MAN NEVER MISSED A DAY OF WORK

His final day of work last Friday was no different from when Willie Sumlar started on August 12, 1957. Sumlar, 84, of Orange, is so thorough that he has not missed a scheduled day of work in 62 years with the maintenance department for Essex County government in Newark. He's never taken a sick day. It's just not him to take off, even he didn't feel well. He'd pushed through any discomfort to be at work by 5 a.m., an hour before his shift started at 6 a.m. Friday was the last day for this retiring senior repairman to get it done, and the last time for the county to thank him for doing it his way. More than 200 county workers surprised him with a standing ovation.

THE DEBATE

Wednesday's Democratic presidential primary debate in Detroit was interrupted twice by protesters in the audience who were trying to draw attention to immigration and policing issues! The first happened only minutes into the debate, which was broadcast live on CNN. During New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker's opening statement, a few audience members began yelling, "Fire Pantaleo." The chant was a reference to Staten Island, N.Y., police officer Daniel Pantaleo, who was involved in the 2014 death of Eric Garner. Garner, who was black, died after being placed in a chokehold by Pantaleo, who is white. Police had approached Garner suspecting he was illegally selling cigarettes.

CHEAP TIPPER SHAMING BACKLASH

Leave a skimpy tip at a restaurant, and the most you might expect to happen is your server cursing you out to other members of the waitstaff. You probably wouldn't expect a member of the state Senate to chide you in public. By name. But that's what happened this week when state Sen. Declan O'Scanlon took to Twitter on Tuesday night and the move has drawn some backlash.

PANTALEO DECISION

Five years after the death of Eric Garner, Daniel Pantaleo, the officer who used the banned chokehold that led to his death, has been fired. The question tonight is what impact will the firing of officer Pantaleo have on police community relations and the NYPD itself moving forward? The decision to fire Pantaleo followed years of anti-police protests here in the city and across the nation. Commissioner O'Neill called Garner's death an 'irreversible tragedy' adding he knows that all won't agree with his decision.

SCHOOL LUNCHES

The Cherry Hill school district considered a proposal this week to not serve lunch to a student with more than $20 in unpaid food service bills. While the board for the 11,000-student school district in Camden County did not act on the proposal from an assistant superintendent, criticism of the measure was swift and harsh. The proposal was first reported by the Philadelphia Inquirer. The plan called for a tuna sandwich with a beverage and side dish to be the only meal served to a student with $10 or more of debt and cut meals off entirely at $20. At the same time, the district is increasing lunch prices.

DOG PARK CONTROVERSY

It's a neighborhood battle that's bad to the bone. Some residents in a wealthy Washington, D.C. suburb want to ban barking at a local dog park and politically connected pooch lovers sure aren't yappy. The neighbors in Chevy Chase Village in Maryland which include a Trump-appointed official and a former state attorney general are duking it out over a patch of land that was turned into an off-leash hotspot, with some neighbors calling it a noisy headache.

HURRICANE DORIAN LATEST

Dorian is expected to become a major hurricane Friday as forecasters are warning Florida residents that there is an "increasing likelihood" parts of the state will face "a prolonged period of hazardous weather conditions" early next week. As of late Friday morning, the Category 2 storm, which has maximum sustained winds blowing at 110 mph, was centered about 660 miles east of West Palm Beach, moving northwest at 10 mph. It was only about 1 mph away from reaching Category 3 status.

5 YEAR OLD DIES FROM FALLEN FENCE

A 5-year-old Brooklyn girl was killed when she was struck by a piece of fence as she was walking with her mother Thursday night, police said. Alysson Pinto-Chaumana began pulling on the decorative fence as she walked on the sidewalk in front of 444 Harman St. in Bushwick about 9 p.m., when parts of it came undone and fell on her, cops said. She fell to the ground and suffered head trauma. Her mother flagged down a passing ambulance, which rushed her to Wyckoff Hospital, where she was pronounced dead, police said. The investigation into the accident is ongoing.

POST GAME PRAYER

Former Bremerton High School football coach Joe Kennedy of Seattle is entering his fourth year without football. In 2015, Kennedy was suspended and eventually fired as a coach because he took 15-30 seconds after each game to kneel, silently and alone, and pray. Three years ago this month, Kennedy filed a lawsuit against Bremerton School District, seeking only to be reinstated as a coach; he did not seek to recoup the financial damage he's also suffered. Although Kennedy has what could be described as an all-pro caliber legal team, his case has been mired in litigation for years now. One setback after another has befallen his case.

ISSUES: CommunityJAIL CELL LABOR

A woman is suing the city and county of Denver, Denver Health Medical Center and six individuals after she said she was forced to deliver a baby alone on a bench in a jail cell at the Denver County Jail. Diana Sanchez said she gave birth to the boy at 10:44 a.m. on July 31, 2018, and that she told Denver Sheriff Department deputies at 5 a.m. that she was in labor, according to a 47-page lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court. She said her water had broken by 9:43 a.m., but, according to the lawsuit, Sanchez gave birth with no medical supervision or treatment. Sanchez, who was booked into the jail two weeks earlier, alleges several Denver Health nurses and jail staffers knew she had been in active labor for hours, was days away from her due date and her water had broken hours before.

Nothing illegal about it, perhaps dangerous but not illegal, he began jet skiing to work in a trip that now takes only 15 minutes. He wears a life vest. Dorian pummeling the Bahamas as a category five hurricane. Heavy rain and forceful winds, generating storm surges of about 20 feet. The slow-moving storm is forecasted to pull away from the Bahamas tomorrow, threatening the southeast coast to Florida and the Carolinas. The hurricane is causing major problems for air travel in Florida. Palm Beach International and Fort Lauderdale airports are now closed due to tropical storm wind conditions. Miami International Airport is open, but is warning travelers to arrive early. One flight tracking site says nearly a thousand flights have been canceled in Florida.

Cosmetic doctors are noticing an uptick in people who are bringing Facetuned, filtered and otherwise altered photos into their offices, or pulling up unaltered selfies to point out what they want fixed. They're calling it "Snapchat dysmorphia," and although the term has been around for a while, a recent article in the JAMA Facial Plastic Surgery brings the topic into focus.

ALIENS

Was an alien shot and killed in the Pine Barrens of New Jersey? A new book, titled "Strange Craft: The True Story of an Air Force Intelligence Officer's Life with UFOs," claims that a military police officer shot an extraterrestrial being at Fort Dix in the early morning hours of January 18, 1978. In the book by author John L. Guerra and published by Bayshore Publishing Co. of Tampa, Florida, retired Air Force Major George Filer III, a decorated former intelligence officer for the 21st Air Force, Military Airlift Command at the adjacent McGuire Air Force Base, recounts the extraordinary tale from America's disco age.
