A year after pleading no contest to criminal charges, one of Pennsylvania's leading natural gas companies is poised to drill and frack in the rural community where it was banned for a dozen years for polluting the water supply.

Coterra Energy Inc. has won permission from state environmental regulators to drill 11 gas wells underneath Dimock Township - the sweet spot of the largest natural gas field in the United States, according to well permit records reviewed by The Associated Press. Billions of dollars worth of natural gas, now locked in shale rock deep underground, await Coterra's drilling rigs.

Some landowners, long shut out of royalties because of the state's lengthy moratorium, can't wait for the Houston-based drilling giant to resume production in Dimock. Other residents dread the industry's return.

New York's highest court on Tuesday ordered the state to draw new congressional districts ahead of the 2024 elections, giving Democrats a potential advantage in what is expected to be a battleground for control of the U.S. House.

The 4-3 decision from the New York Court of Appeals could have major ramifications as Democrats angle for more favorable district lines in the state next year. Republicans, who won control of the House after flipping seats in New York, sought to keep the map in place. The state's bipartisan Independent Redistricting Commission will now be tasked with coming up with new districts, which will then go before the Democrat-controlled Legislature for approval. The court ordered the commission to file a map no later than Feb. 28, 2024.

Water utilities in New York will now be required to publicly share where and how many lead service lines are in their system. Governor Kathy Hochul signed legislation today, known as the Lead Pipe Right to Know Act, to protect New Yorkers from the extraordinary public health risk posed by lead pipes. The legislation requires making information easily accessible to the public about the number and location of lead pipes so that state and federal resources can be secured and efficiently targeted to support local efforts to remove all lead pipes impacting New York's drinking water.

Public school advocates in Pennsylvania are criticizing publicly funded programs that pay tuition at private and religious schools. They say many such schools discriminate by cherry-picking which students are able to attend. School funding is an unresolved area of contention as the House and Senate return to session on Monday. Democrats are pushing for billions more for public schools, while Republicans press to expand taxpayer funding for private schools. The two sides are clashing over a program that provides tax credits to defray the cost of private-school tuition.

A bill that would give Pennsylvania school districts greater flexibility to have shorter school weeks or longer days is headed to the governor's desk for his approval. The legislation passed both chambers unanimously. This would allow schools to complete the school year in either a minimum of 180 days or 900 hours at the elementary level. And 180 days or 990 at the secondary level. The schools currently must do both.

Guest(s): Ashley Evans, Meteorologist-in-charge of the NWS

Topics: Snow Squalls

Snow Squalls are often associated with strong cold fronts that bring arctic air rapidly through an area during winter. They are marked by sudden whiteouts, gusty winds and temperature drops causing a flash freeze that turns water to ice on road surfaces in a matter of minutes and creates rapidly deteriorating driving conditions...often with chain-reaction accidents and treacherous travel. I'm Clint Gregory.

Ashley Evans, Meteorologist-in-Charge of the National Weather Service, says that few winter weather phenomena pose a greater threat to highway motorists in the Commonwealth than snow squalls.....[travel9]:17
