Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: Che Ahn, Pastor of Harvest Rock Church shares his father's experience with communism and its impact on his response to the church shutdowns during COVID-19 and suing the governor of California. He tells us about the billboards Governor Newsome distributed in seven states that reference scripture and promote coming to California for an abortion and the bill Proposition 1 that would codify into California's state constitution to allow abortion up to the last day of the ninth month. He also talks about evangelical pastors running for political office, defunding of the police in Los Angeles, and the need for revival in America, which is the reason he wrote his new book "Turning Our Nation Back to God Through Historic Revival."

Kay Rubacek was taken captive and beaten by the Chinese communist party. Through her own experience, Kay explains that the Chinese communist party need/want to always be in control of information. According to Kay Rubacek, it is only when individuals start to break that control and expose the lies that the communist government is most vulnerable. It is important for Americans to recognize the freedom we have and to protect it by speaking the truth and fighting against communism.

Restoring America with Erick Stakelbeck: Ronald Reagan once compared the United States to a shining city on a hill. During his inaugural address, George Washington said, "The preservation of the secret fire of liberty, may be staked," on what he called "the experiment entrusted to the hands, of the American people." They knew, instinctively, that the United States was unlike any nation in the history of the world. A beacon of freedom blessed by God above, but to whom much is given much is required. The United States today is more divided than at any time since the civil war, and the divide goes far beyond politics to the very essence of who we are. Will America continue to carry the banner for freedom and Judeo-Christian civilization, of liberty and equality for all? Or will we choose socialism, secularism, and squabbling factions that are obsessed with race, gender, sexual identity, and tearing down the very foundations on which this nation was created. And what happens if we choose the latter? Over the next hour, you'll hear from leaders in every field. From Florida Governor, Ron Desantis, to Former Secretary of State, Mike Pompeo, Michele Bachmann, Greg Abbott, Governor of Texas, and Rev. Franklin Graham, plus top leaders in education, business, media, and faith, as they lay out the blueprint for restoring America.

Tonight on Praise Faith and Blue: Activist, Speaker, and Lead Organizer of the National Faith and Blue Weekend, Reverend Markel Hutchins; along with Commander Patrick Yoes, National President of Fraternal Order of Police; Chief Gina Hawkins of the Fayetteville, North Carolina Police Department; Sheriff Bill Brown, Vice President of Major County Sheriffs of America; Chief John Drake, Metropolitan Nashville Police Department; and Chief M. Vance Rice, Mississippi State University Police Department, encourage viewers to participate in the third annual Faith and Blue Weekend October 7th through 10th. This is a time when the church and the community can gather and show their appreciation and support for their local law enforcement agencies. In the aftermath of some of the law enforcement involved tragedies that have divided Americans in so many ways, Reverend Hutchins knew we needed to take a different approach to advance the issues of social justice, inclusion, and safe communities, where officers and community residents are respected. They discuss the number of law enforcement officers that are leaving the profession due to job-related stresses, rising suicide rates among law enforcement officers, public safety, the rise in crime and violence, the importance of community engagement to build trust and relationships to reduce crime, and the effectiveness of the church and faith-based community involvement. Women are encouraged to consider a career in law enforcement and young people, particularly young people of color, are encouraged to get involved and be the change they want to see in their community.

Statistic shows that 2.67 trillion dollars of the United States economic value every year come from what Christians are doing. This is about 20% of the United States economy. There are 130,000 addiction programs based in churches in the US. The US government gives away about $33 billion in aid to the overseas poor. American Christians give away $44 billion every year in economic aid. Jeff Myers encourages individuals to not get discouraged about the crisis but continue to be the best they can be in every vocation they're called to, representing the truth of Christ in all areas.

Tonight on Praise: This week began with an ominous warning by the CEO of JP Morgan Chase who stated that the U.S. likely will fall into a recession in six to nine months and that it may not be just a mild economic contraction. Then the International Monetary Fund followed up by announcing that they are cutting their global growth forecast for next year, warning that the worst is yet to come, and stating that 2023 will feel like a recession for millions around the world. From Wall Street to Main Street, an uncertain economic future has put people on edge. As we head into the midterm elections, economic issues like inflation are at the top of concern for midterm voters. In a recent pole, eighty-two percent of Americans ranked inflation as an extremely important issue. Pain in the pocketbooks. The price of gas drastically shifting back up, as OPEC suddenly cuts production. Interest rates rising with further increases on the horizon. Personal credit card balances escalating while the rate of personal savings in America falls to its lowest level since 2008. As Christians, how do we discern the times and successfully navigate through the uncertainty. As financial stress mounts in the midst of this difficult economic environment, another challenge is beginning to creep up in our society, the growing hostility toward Christianity in our culture. A high school football coach in Washington was fired for praying on the field after a game. In Austin, Texas, a chaplain at the local fire department wrote on his personal blog that he objected to men playing in women's sports. The chaplain was fired. Fifty-nine percent of those surveyed in a recent Lifeway research poll say religious tolerance for Christians in the U.S. is on the decline. What do we do when the workplace silences Christian values and pushes a corporate agenda contrary to our Judeo-Christian values? Are our liberties, freedoms, being protected in America? As Christians, how do we move forward within a culture that is increasingly unreceptive to our values? Join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz now as they discuss the pressing matters of our day from a Christian world view.

Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: How do you transform a mom-and-pop shop into a multi-billion-dollar business? Leadership. That's what we're talking about today. How can we apply biblical wisdom in today's world? How can we create a culture that is magnetic and draws people in. How do we better serve one another? These are all questions we'll be exploring today on the topic of leadership with our two guests. How did David Green take Hobby Lobby, a company which he started in his home, to become the largest privately owned arts and crafts retailer in the world. We'll hear exactly how he did it in a moment. We'll also hear from best-selling author and speaker Clay Scroggins, who found the secret to becoming a powerful servant leader who leverages influence to get things done. Let's talk about it right now on Takeaways.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: Inflation is about to hit home in yet another assault on family budgets. This time it's due to a chilling increase in heating prices along with expectations for a winter that's colder than normal. Energy officials predict your heating bill could take an enormous hit compared to previous years. It partly depends on the type of heating your home is equipped for, but nearly half of Americans will see a significant spike in heating costs, somewhere around 28%. Those living in colder climates will face the highest energy bills, and that's not just the Northeast. The Winter Fuels Outlook indicates your heating bill will join the long list of escalating costs getting pushed higher by inflation as well as the war in Ukraine. The largest increase is likely to be felt through the Midwest where residents can expect a 33% cost increase to keep warm this winter. Mark Wolfe with the National Energy Assistance Director's Association warns this winter will be very expensive for many. The outlook anticipates natural gas users will see about a 28% increase. Heating oil will increase by roughly 27%. If you have electric heating, that increase should be closer to 10%, with a 5% increase for propane homes. Wolfe says those numbers can change depending on the market and how cold it gets. Wolfe works with congressional leaders to help low-income families pay their bills. He says families making under $45,000 per year can tap into government supplemental assistance, and that everyone can learn to cut costs. There is a silver lining for residents with gas-powered furnaces. Although costs will go up, your bill is expected to be about 30% less than those with electric furnaces or heat pumps. That's because electric heat costs more to generate and isn't as efficient in colder climates.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: With record high inflation, Americans are struggling to keep up given the higher costs of just about everything from gas to groceries. That means this year, Thanksgiving might be trimmed when it comes to the usual big family meal and celebration. According to a study by Personal Capital, an online wealth management company, one in four Americans say they're skipping Thanksgiving because they can't afford the holiday meal this year. One in three say they're hosting a smaller dinner due to higher food prices. And a whopping 88 percent are cutting at least one dish from their table to make ends meet. This year, turkey costs 20 percent more than it did in 2021. Experts say the biggest factor driving up those prices – a wave bird flu that hit in the spring. The Department of Agriculture reports that food prices have jumped 13 percent between September 2021 and 2022. It is an issue affecting not just families but local foodbanks as well. Christopher Tan of the Foodbank of Southeastern Virginia and The Eastern Shore said his organization began ordering turkeys back in June. Tan also says that as grocery costs have increased so has the number of families seeking help. To help struggling families, the supermarket chain Aldi is rolling its Thanksgiving prices back to 2019 costs. Despite the tight economic times, some are choosing to be thankful no matter the costs.

CBN White House Correspondent Abigail Robertson Reports: The Federal Reserve announced on Wednesday it's raising interest rates by another half point in an effort to stifle America's crushing inflation problem. While this is smaller than the three quarter-point hikes from the past four Fed meetings, it's still double the customary quarter-point raise. As the Federal Reserve fights its war on inflation with repeated, unusually high interest rate hikes, it's not just the American people paying more to borrow money, but the federal government, too. In fact federal interest payments are on track to cost more than the defenses budget in the coming years. FreedomWorks economist Stephen Moore is among those sounding the alarm on Washington's reckless spending. The federal government is already $31 trillion in debt, and that figure keeps going up every day. The rising costs of financing that debt will leave less and less money for Congress to spend on things like defense, health, infrastructure, and education. According to the U.S. Treasury Department, in fiscal 2022, the federal government made $475 billion in net interest payments, up from $352 billion the prior year. Dr. Steven Skancke, an economic advisor at Keel Point Investments, tells CBN News' Faith Nation the Federal Reserve needs time to see the cumulative effects of its rate hikes. President Biden claims his budget and economic plans are working. In the months ahead, the economic focus is likely to shift from rising prices to rising interest rates and their impact on the economy and federal spending. In the longer term, those rising interest rates are likely going to be very expensive both for consumers and Washington.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Food banks and pantries nationwide are struggling to keep up with demand. Soaring food prices combined with fewer donations are leading to thinly stocked shelves. The impact is making it more challenging to feed the hungry, especially this time of year. For the past ten years, the church has hosted Fresh food Wednesdays, an outreach distributing food to the community's working poor. The increased numbers are likely to keep growing with even higher grocery prices expected and the colder weather ahead. Meanwhile, donations have decreased over the last few months for many food banks. Christopher Tan heads the Foodbank of Southeastern Virginia and the Eastern Shore. Tim Wright, a member of the leadership team at The Gathering's Fresh Food Wednesdays, said getting supplies from the local food bank is critical and some key products are proving harder to come by. When supplies run low, the church must come up with other ways to meet the needs. Those are all items Pastor Stephanie Parker of The Gathering at Scott Memorial United Methodist Church hopes to provide families for the holidays. Despite the challenges with keeping the shelves stocked, the team at The Gathering at Scott Memorial UMC trusts that God will continue to provide. Wright says the goal isn't just about providing food for the families, but also displaying the love and support of Christ.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Twelve percent of college students report either experiencing or being involved in an unplanned pregnancy. Some experts say that number could actually be even higher. It's a situation that leaves many women feeling isolated and unsupported, especially in a college setting. The non-profit group Baby Steps helps pregnant and parenting student-moms at Auburn University with housing, support, and community. Its goal is to empower them to have their baby and education. Baby Steps has operated near the Auburn University campus for the last five years. Kaitlyn Willing, Director of Operations at Baby Steps, shared how it all started. That is the reality for many young college students who fear that a child could shatter their dreams of getting an education. It's an issue Willing knows all too well. Located just a short walk from campus, Baby Steps provides resources to help women on their journey to a college degree while also embracing motherhood. An on-campus club that helps meet the needs of student moms is just one way to alleviate some of that pressure. Devon McGlon, a junior at Auburn, said volunteering to help fellow students is both rewarding and inspiring. While Auburn does not fund the on-campus club, Willing sees it as an asset to the university. As a graduate with a degree in human development and family studies, Willing says it is refreshing to see other women fulfill their goals. Many are beyond grateful. It is much-needed help that will soon expand to young mothers to be on other college campuses.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: The nation's report card is in, and it shows students across the country are falling behind in the classroom. A new report out today highlights declining test scores, especially in math and reading. Leading officials are scrambling to find solutions. More than 20 years of educational gains have been wiped out across the country since 2017 which indicates the COVID lockdown isn't the only culprit. These national statistics regularly track math and reading comprehension among 4th and 8th grade in a measurement often called "the nation's report card." The numbers show Virginia was hit the hardest, boasting the nation's lowest reading standard along with the lowest proficiency in testing. The state ties Maryland with the largest decline in 4th-grade math since 2017 and the largest decline in 4th-grade reading. While the head of the organization releasing the numbers called them the "clearest picture yet" of the impacts of the coronavirus pandemic on learning, Gov. Youngkin also blames previous administrations due to declining numbers well before the pandemic. Heritage Foundation Education Fellow Jonathan Butcher says special interest groups and school unions that fought to close schools should also clearly bear responsibility. States like Virginia will depend on federal dollars to help fix the broken system. Roughly $150 billion in COVID relief money remains unspent. Now schools are scrambling to figure out how to turn those dollars into better test scores. Regardless of who's to blame for America's declining classrooms, educators say it's time for everyone to roll up their sleeves and get to work. While the data doesn't show a clear connection between back-to-school policies and academic performance, Butcher points out private and Catholic schools were able to maintain stable test scores compared to schools that shut their doors during COVID.

Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: O.S. Hawkins, Bestselling Author and Pastor, introduces Ian Sobel, CEO of BioHarvest Sciences, the global leaders in plant cell technology. They discuss a new product called Vinia that helps increase blood flow. Ian explains how technology across a lineup of critical polyphenols that can have a dramatic impact on our bodies as we look to experience a better, more wholistic life as we age. We are at the crossroads of three very important trends: health and wellness, the power of technology, and sustainability. Given what the world has experienced the last two years, health and wellness has never been more on people's minds than ever before. Breakthrough technology is going to drive that quality of longevity in our lives, and as global citizens, we must make sure we leave the world in a better state for our children and our grandchildren.

Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: Tim Tebow shares that as a young boy his parents talked to him often about influence, telling him that every day you have a chance to influence the people around you, and there are ripple effects for every decision. Tim has written his latest book, One-Year Devotional Mission Possible: 365 Days of Inspiration for Pursuing Your God-Given Purpose, with the goal to help people start the day with what is most important, to help encourage people to trust God no matter what is happening, and to challenge people to live intentionally. Let's put time in for what we say are our top priorities and reframe our perspective and mindset. It's about spiritual health, emotional health, and relational health. He shares that a recent study showed young people spend more time on digital devices than they do sleeping. There are a lot of things competing for our time, energy, and attention. Getting back to what really matters, the right framework, and the right mindset helps us to be more ready to take on life. If we don't do that preparation, it's so much easier to be moved by the wind. Mission means the task or job someone has been given to do. Possible means to be able. He talks about the Tim Tebow Foundation that fights for people that can't fight for themselves in over seventy countries around the world. He shares that if they've been thrown away, beaten, neglected, or trafficked, then they're the people his organization is fighting for, that they love, that they've been called to take care of and bring faith, hope, and love to. He believes this is what God has called him to do in this lifetime and it's the greatest mission that he's on. For more information visit timtebowfoundation.org.

Tonight on Praise: Nona Jones, Speaker, Pastor, Entrepreneur, and Best-Selling Author, just released her new book, Killing Comparison. She shares her testimony and talks about being abused as a child. She tells us the power of words, especially in our formative years as children, shape our identity. Insecurity is a question of what your identity is secured to. To overcome insecurity we first must acknowledge that we are insecure, feel fear, anger, or rejection. She talks about getting physically healthy and the difference between healthy and toxic comparison. Social media exposes our insecurity, but it is not the source of our insecurity. It's really a question of what is going on in our heart. She encourages people to guard their heart. Insecure foundations such as physical appearance, marital status, financial status, recession, all these things change, but God's love never changes and is not based on our performance.

CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: In the early 2000s, when American troops began fighting what became a 20-year War on Terror, there was little understanding of the causes and potential impact of traumatic brain injuries. For many dedicated warriors, these invisible wounds have become a haunting and painful reminder of their time on the battlefield. Ret. U.S. Army Special Forces Aviator, Greg Coker, was shot down in 2004 while serving in Iraq. Among the wounds he sustained: a lingering traumatic brain injury (TBI.) Despite seeing several specialists, not one could identify the treatment Coker needed, or even pinpoint the brain injury. So, after his physical wounds healed, he went on to serve five more combat deployments, unknowingly exposing his brain to even more trauma. It wasn't until after he retired in 2007 that he truly began experiencing symptoms from multiple injuries to his brain. He admits this took him to a pretty dark place mentally before choosing to seek help. Fortunately, he found state-of-the-art treatment, which provided an explanation of his long-term symptoms and even helped reverse some of the damage. That's not the norm, however, as recent data shows less than half of the veterans suffering this injury's lasting effects will actually seek help. And those sustaining a brain injury after serving in Iraq and Afghanistan are twice as likely to consider suicide. The Pentagon realized it had a growing problem and began to take action. Over the last 20-years, huge strides have been made in researching and treating traumatic brain injuries. Now, comes a new plan to build on that momentum with a single comprehensive strategy, known as the War Fighter Brain Health Initiative. The first step in the five-part plan will be to identify the baseline brain health of all service members, which can be monitored throughout their career. Policies will also be developed to prevent, identify, and treat brain damage caused in training, as well as combat. Some of the Pentagon's progress in this area comes from research into Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy (CTE), the brain disease associated with many NFL players. Veterans have also been diagnosed with this serious neurodegenerative disease, which currently can only be diagnosed post-mortem. For years, veterans like Coker have been advocating for this kind of support from the top. And while he says it's long overdue, he believes these new policies could save lives. The military has six to 48 months to implement the 53 action steps detailed in the War Fighter Brain Health Initiative, although completing some aspects of the plan will take much longer. For example, obtaining the brain assessment of all personnel, including new recruits, active duty, national guard, and reserve, could take about five years. A long undertaking, expected to be well worth the time and investment.

CBN News Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Health experts and broken-hearted family members along with former marijuana users themselves are all warning about the high potency of today's weed. The combination of a stronger product plus states legalizing the drug equals a dangerous situation. The highly concentrated marijuana is leading to greater levels of addiction and mental disorders. Zach Plant started using marijuana to ease the stress in his life, he told CBN News. At first, he enjoyed getting high whenever he could. Months later, Zach entered the hospital for cannabis-induced psychosis, a mental health disorder that can cause people to lose touch with reality, and experience hallucinations, delusions, and paranoia. While Zach's symptoms didn't last, doctors warned him that if he used marijuana again, he could risk going into psychosis and not ever coming out. Up until about twenty years ago, most marijuana contained comparatively low levels of THC, the ingredient that makes users high, hovering around three percent. Now, that concentration can be ten times greater, 30-percent THC, and in some cases, much more than that. New research published in the medical journal Lancet Psychiatry show's today highly potent marijuana can be directly linked to a greater risk of mental illness and addiction. Christine Miller, Ph.D., a neuroscientist specializing in psychosis, told CBN News the public should become better educated about the link between marijuana use and serious mental health impacts, including psychosis and suicide. This super-strong weed is widely available on the streets as well as in cannabis dispensaries nationwide, sources that can both carry risks to the buyer. So far 37 states have legalized medical marijuana and in 19 of those states, recreational use is also legal. All of these sales rake in billions of tax dollars for those state and local governments. Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer, (D-NY), U.S. Senator Core Booker (D-NJ), and Senate Finance Committee Chair Ron Wyden, (D-OR) introduced legislation in July to federally decriminalize marijuana and establish a federal cannabis tax. However, many believe the U.S. needs to revive the war on drugs, now more than ever, including Aubree Adams, the Director of Every Brain Matters, an advocacy group supporting and educating families on the harmful effects of cannabis. She speaks from personal experience. Her own son and her husband used the amped-up weed after it became legal in their home state of Colorado, not knowing how powerful it had become. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates one-third of today's marijuana users are addicted. Marijuana addiction interferes with normal life, as Zach Plant knows all too well. Scientists say marijuana addiction can also hamper the development of children and young adults. It has been two years since Zach suffered from marijuana-induced psychosis, and he's doing great. He's glad to be off the drug and recommends others steer clear of it too.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Are you a coffee drinker? Do you prefer tea instead? Sometimes people take sides about which is better for you. As it turns out, both drinks are generally good for us under certain circumstances, but one appears to have a slight advantage. CBN News asked medical researcher, heart surgeon, and author, Steven Gundry, M.D. his opinion. Dr. Gundry says the biggest reason is because both coffee and tea are loaded with plant compounds called polyphenols. Research shows polyphenols help prevent cancer and feed our mitochondria, the energy-producing organelles in our cells. Coffee generally contains more polyphenols than tea, but the polyphenol content in coffee varies according to the way it's roasted. After coffee, for the most part, the highest polyphenol concentration is found in green tea, followed by black tea. It's generally healthier if you don't add anything to these drinks. If adding something light to your drink, Dr. Gundry recommends non-dairy creamers like coconut milk or almond milk. When it comes to sweetening your beverage, Dr. Gundry advises avoiding pretty much every sweetener. Natural ones, like organic honey and sugar, can raise insulin levels and lead to weight gain. Artificial sweeteners, like aspartame and sucralose, can contribute to an unhealthy gut microbiome and increase sugar cravings. However, Dr. Gundry makes one exception: the new, low-calorie sweetener that's about 70% as sweet as sugar. Both coffee and tea contain cancer-fighting antioxidants. Coffee has more. Coffee also contains more caffeine, which is generally considered healthy, especially for the brain. Too much caffeine, however, can interfere with a good night's sleep. So depending on the time of day, sometimes tea is the better choice. Black tee has more caffeine than green. Dr. Gundry says two of the healthiest teas are Pu-erh and matcha. Pu-erh is generally a black tea that is fermented, which means it tends to be especially good for the gut, because fermented foods generally contain the good bacteria that boost our immune system. Matcha is a type of green tea that typically comes in powered form. He recommends organic choices from Japan. So in the coffee vs. tea showdown, coffee has the edge. But really, they're both winners.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: This flu season is off to a deadly start. The C.D.C. reports so far 2,100 Americans have died from the illness, including seven children. Most of the cases are influenza A (H3N2) viruses, but the proportion of influenza A (H1N1) is increasing slightly. Fourteen mostly southern and eastern states are currently experiencing the highest possible level of flu activity, with many others not far behind. Approximately 38,000 people have been hospitalized for the flu so far this season, which is the highest level this early in the season since the 2009 Swine Flu pandemic. Healthcare workers, like Emergency Medicine Physician at New York City's Mt. Sinai Hospital Dr. Brendan Carr, are bracing for the possibility of overwhelming patient intakes this winter. The flu isn't the only virus affecting the U.S. right now. RSV, COVID-19, and the common cold are other viruses that are circulating the country that are likely to spread more widely during the holidays as people gather together inside. However, being exposed to a virus doesn't necessarily translate into sickness. A strong immune system can make the difference between no symptoms, mild symptoms, or severe illness, or even death, according to gastroenterologist and gut health expert Robynne Chutkan, M.D., author of "The Anti-Viral Gut: Tackling Pathogens from the Inside Out." A strong immune system can be traced to higher levels of good bacteria in the intestines because these organisms can recognize when harmful viruses enter the body. Good bacteria, which are so vital to a healthy immune system, are living organisms found in foods like yogurt and kimchi, beverages like kombucha, and some probiotic supplements. However, just like soldiers in an army, simply possessing some of these good bacteria in our gut isn't enough to effectively withstand the onslaught of viruses attacking our bodies. Dr. Chutkan says we need to have lots of them. That's why she says it's critically important to feed the good bacteria fiber-rich foods, so they grow and multiply. And while fiber strengthens the gut, certain medications can harm it. Dr. Chutkan says these medications include antibiotics and stomach acid blockers. Still, these medications can be lifesaving in some cases, so Dr. Chutkan recommends discussing with your doctor whether you really need them.

The figure designated as TOPIC SEGMENT DURATION is based upon our good faith judgment and may not represent exact time.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: This winter we're already seeing a lot of sickness going around. One key factor in staying well is getting plenty of sleep. Research shows people who don't are four times more likely to catch a cold than people exposed to the same virus, but who sleep more. Still, getting enough sleep is often easier said than done. Scientific evidence shows that how much we sleep directly relates to our immune system function. Getting plenty of ZZZs helps repair just about every system within our bodies, according to Aric A. Prather, PhD, who runs one of the world's most successful sleep clinics and is the author of "The Sleep Prescription: 7 Days to Unlocking Your Best Rest." Most adults need about eight hours a night, but that can vary, especially as people get into their senior years. In fact, Dr. Prather warns against becoming fixated on getting eight hours a night, which can actually cause anxiety and ironically lead to sleep deprivation. Anxiety often creates a barrier to sleep. People who struggle with this should consider preparing to bedtime a full two hours before lights out. That means moving from work, news, and electronics to something more calming, familiar, and pleasant. Prather recommends monitoring the content of pre-bedtime activities more than the activity itself. For example, while reading is often soothing, don't choose an exciting book that you can't put down and revs up your mind. Make sure you chose something relaxing. Likewise if you choose to watch something, steer clear of a thrilling, engaging program that stimulates your mind. Instead opt for something like sit-com reruns. One way to lessen worrying in bed is by setting aside time during the day to make a list of your problems and then writing down the first step towards a solution. Prather said the most important tip he gives to people suffering from insomnia is to wake up at the same time each morning even on weekends. This is a useful tool to gain control over when the body naturally gets sleepy, also known as circadian rhythm. Prather said we only fall asleep when the feeling of tiredness "washes over us," something we can't control. However, we can control when we wake up. That's important because waking up at the same time each day will eventually cue our body's sense of tiredness to wash over us at the same time each night. He adds that the process might end up costing us at least one nights of poor sleep, but that's ok, because our bodies can bounce back from just a few nights of bad sleep. It's the pattern of poor sleep that creates health problems. If you often toss and turn in the middle of the night, try getting out of bed and moving to a different location, like the couch. That can help your brain avoid associating anxiety with your bed, something called conditioned arousal. Prather said our brains associate being in bed with the emotions we feel when we are in bed, so it's important our brains don't associate the bed with anxiety. Prather said when you get out of bed in the middle of the night, don't turn on the lights or do anything active. You want to go back to those relaxing things that are known to bring on that sleepiness for you. And when you feel sleepy again you go back to your bed. Exercise during the day tends to help us sleep well, so does a dark room that's a cool 65 degrees. On the other hand, caffeine can get in the way of a restful night's sleep, as can alcohol, which can suppress important dreaming, or REM sleep. Sleep aids, like melatonin, and sleep medications can also lead to long-term sleep issues

Health/Mental Health

The figure designated as TOPIC SEGMENT DURATION is based upon our good faith judgment and may not represent exact time.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Hospital workers across the United States are dealing with more flu patients than they've seen in a decade this time of year, and experts predict the numbers will only increase throughout the winter as people gather in closed, indoor settings during the Christmas season. So far this flu season, there have been at least 8.7 million illnesses, 78,000 hospitalizations, and 4, 500 deaths, including 14 children, from flu so far this season, according to CDC estimates. In addition to the flu, hospitals also report high numbers of patients being admitted for two other respiratory viruses – COVID-19 and RSV, respiratory syncytial virus – leading many to label the current onslaught of three illnesses at once, a "triple-demic." Adding to the problem, doctors and patients report seeing shortages of several medications such as prescription drugs like Tamiflu, an anti-viral medicine that is used to treat the flu. They're also reporting shortages of amoxicillin, an antibiotic commonly used as the first line of defense for ear infections in children and other bacterial infections, many of which can be secondary infections brought-on by primary viral infections, like the flu. Nationwide, consumers report being unable to find over-the-counter (OTC) medications on many store shelves across the country. Most notably, nervous parents complain of being unable to find Children's Tylenol, a popular OTC fever reducer and pain reliever that many pediatricians recommend for their young patients who are suffering from respiratory illnesses. However, Johnson & Johnson, the manufacturer of Children's Tylenol released a statement denying a shortage is happening in the U.S. Health experts say if you are experiencing difficulty finding the OTC medication you're looking for, you can talk to your doctor or pharmacist about possible substitutions. For example, sometimes Children's Motrin can replace Children's Tylenol. Sometimes home remedies work, like the old-school fever reducer of putting a cold towel on the forehead or back of the neck where the body gets cooled most easily. Substitutions, however, aren't always available, such as with the current shortage of Adderall, commonly used to treat ADHD. The medication has been in short supply for months and is not related to the increase in viral illnesses. Patients who use Adderall can discuss possible substitutions with their doctor, which can include the drugs Ritalin, Concerta and Straterra, but not always. Earlier this year, desperate parents experienced a months-long shortage of another critical pharmaceutical product, baby formula, which, like the Adderall shortage was unrelated to a spike in illnesses. The Heritage Foundation's Economist Steve Moore told CBN News the Biden administration is responsible for the ongoing pharmaceutical shortages. However, a top Biden administration health official says pharmaceutical shortfalls aren't the administration's fault, and have been around for a long time. So while America struggles with the so-called "triple-demic," doctors and consumers will need to be creative in making do with shortages of medications that treat these illnesses and others.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The Christmas season brings joy to millions, yet too many of us feel anxious and depressed this time of year. According to The American Psychological Association, 38 percent of people surveyed said their stress increased during the holiday season, which can lead to physical illness, depression, anxiety, and substance misuse. To make matters worse, the National Alliance on Mental Illness noted that 64 percent of individuals living with a mental illness felt that their conditions worsened around the holidays. There are many reasons people wrestle with the holiday blues, some we can control, others we can't. We go into the holiday season with a time change, which all by itself increases the incidence of depression from less sunlight, a condition often referred to as Seasonal Affective Disorder, or SAD. However, we can trick our minds into thinking we're catching some rays by using so-called "happy lights," according to psychiatrist Daniel Amen, founder of Amen Clinics, which has the world's largest database of brain scans for psychiatry. Many of us press pause during the holidays when it comes to taking care of ourselves, which can leave us feeling sad and overwhelmed. The same can be said about over-indulging in holiday sweets. On the other hand, Dr. Amen says a healthy diet can be a mood lifter. Getting plenty of sleep also goes a long way towards good mental health. During the holiday rush, don't skip workouts. Exercise is one of the best ways to stave-off depression and keep stress at bay. Dr. Amen said while hitting the gym is great, you don't have to go to a lot of fuss. Sometimes grief and loneliness intensify during the holidays but can lift when we do things that cause us to connect with and give to others. He cited a Baltimore study that measured the mental health benefits of volunteering. Getting involved with family, however, can be tricky. Many say their source of stress during the holidays stems from familial conflict. Dr. Amen recommends keeping expectations low to avoid becoming disappointed. With that in mind, Dr. Amen said if you feel disrespected by certain people, it's alright to cut short holiday visits with them. Dr. Amen says sometimes the root problem of depression and anxiety stems from perpetually negative self-talk. To turn that around, Dr. Amen recommends paying attention to our thoughts, then challenging them and replacing them, if necessary. Amen says one example of false thinking is the belief that we need to spend more money than we can afford on Christmas gifts. He recommends staying within a reasonable budget which can even include homemade gifts from the heart.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: More people die from heart attacks during the week between Christmas and New Year's Day than any other week of the year, with Christmas Day being the deadliest day of all, according to the American Heart Association. Health experts cite a number of reasons for the increase, including greater levels of stress, unhealthy eating, and alcohol consumption. The phenomenon has become so pervasive that health experts have developed a name for it: holiday heart syndrome. University of Washington Medical Center cardiologist Eugene Yang said unhealthy choices this time of year can land people in the hospital and can even be deadly. Holiday stress often stems from excessive relationship anxiety which tends to peak during the holidays when families and loved ones experience conflict. At the same time, this stress can be made worse by a lack of exercise, which health experts say can relieve stress. Not enough sleep can also increase stress and can negatively impact the way the heart works. New research shows the average adult sleeps about 40 minutes less during the month of December, and those who host holiday gatherings lose close to an hour and a half each day preparing to have guests in their home and during the stay. Alcohol consumption tends to skyrocket during the holidays and can pose a threat, even to people who have no known risk factors. For many binge drinking leads to an irregular heartbeat, a condition commonly linked to an increased risk for stroke. Heart doctors urge people to take it easy when it comes to eating foods high in sugar, salt, and fat, as well as alcoholic beverages, and suggest balancing these with plenty of water and healthy foods, such as a salad every day. Additionally, health experts recommend making time for stress-relieving measures, such as prayer, exercise, and plenty of sleep. Seek help immediately if you or someone you are with experiences warning signs of a heart attack, such as chest pain and shortness of breath. In some cases, particularly in women, heart attack symptoms can be more subtle, such as pain or discomfort in the jaw, neck, back, arm, or shoulder, feeling nauseous, light-headed, or unusually tired.

CBN Washington Correspondent Jenna Browder Reports: During the pandemic, millions of children spent months learning online. Studies show that American kids spend a huge chunk of the day there, and not just for school. For some, it's become an addiction. That's why Molly DeFrank tells CBN News it's time for a digital detox. Her new book, Digital Detox: The Two-Week Tech Reset for Kids was inspired by her own family and their experience. The book begins by taking parents step by step through a two-week cold turkey detox for their children. She says it comes down to brain chemistry. Too much screen time creates excessive levels of dopamine in the brain, the kind that can be addictive. For kids, it's a problem that can follow them well into their adult lives. The second half of her book helps parents develop a long-term strategy using their observations from the detox period. So how often should parents do a digital detox? DeFrank says it's different for every family and child. For most families, like hers, it's not about eliminating technology, just making sure it's in its right place. Her own children are a testament to that. In just two weeks, she says they were free from the grip of technology, moods shifted, creativity exploded, and they learned how to entertain themselves and enjoy life without screens. And it's not just for kids, DeFrank adds. Adults too can benefit from a digital detox.
