Today on The Eric Metaxas Radio Show: Chad Robichaux, Founder of Mighty Oaks Foundation, talks about being a Mixed Martial Arts Champion, his military background, his faith, his struggle with severe anxiety, depression, panic attacks, his diagnosed PTSD, his attempt to take his life, and the restoration of his life and family. His desire to share what he discovered with others led he and his wife to start the Mighty Oaks Foundation. They speak to active-duty troops based around the world, write books, give away books, provide a week-long recovery program called The Legacy Program at five different ranches around the country, provide free programs for our troops and even pay for their travel for active-duty veterans, first responders, and their spouses. Visit mightoaksprograms.org for more information. Chad talks about the US withdrawal from Afghanistan and how Aziz became his teammate. He shares this story in his brand-new book, "Saving Aziz How the Mission to Help One Became a Calling to Save Thousands" and how he put together a team of former operations veterans to rescue one family: Aziz, his wife and six children. Another team member brought up 3,500 orphans that were left behind of former Afghan national army soldiers who had died in combat. They decided to help as many Americans, interpreters, their families, women, and children as they could. When God put the burden upon their hearts, all of them were obedient to that call and they witnessed a divine miracle and a series of events over the next three days that made it possible to rescue these 17,000 people. His team chose to stay, which led to a coalition effort with other organizations such as Mercury One, Might Oaks, Save Our Allies and Task Force Argo, and Samaritan’s Purse, and over two months they got another 5,000 people out.

The Impact of TBN: In the early 1970's Paul and Jan Crouch began the Trinity Broadcasting Network with the purpose to use every available means to reach as many individuals and families as possible with the life-changing gospel of Jesus Christ. We are committed to tackling issues from a Christian perspective; issues such as human trafficking and critical race theory, to protests from civil rights and the invasion of Ukraine. Whatever the subject matter, we aim to equip you with an understanding of current events that concern you, your loved ones, and your faith. We're also dedicated to connecting viewers in their first language. Stretching from the pacific nations to the western edge of the United States, from the most southern tip of South America to the Nordic islands, our broadcast extends to more than 175 countries and are dubbed into over a dozen languages and we're just getting started. TBN programming is expanding globally and digitally. For us it's about the people. It's about a hands on accessible personal online church that meets the needs of believers and nonbelievers wherever, whenever, and however. We Christians have a responsibility to encourage the broken hearted, to help the burdened, to love the fallen and forsaken. This is the heart of Christ and this is why TBN operates in and through prayer. We are more than broadcasters and content creators, we're also prayer warriors. Every minute of every hour of every day we are praying and are here to stand with you. Our mission is being fulfilled through your prayers and support. Because of you we're able to see lives saved and hearts transformed. Words can't begin to describe our gratitude. Your trust, your dedication and your generosity is why we're here today. This ministry is a privilege we cannot do without you. It's a legacy we're all too pleased to carry on. For as long as there are people who haven't heard his name or seen his love, we at TBN will serve as his messengers. Wherever God calls us we will go until the day Jesus returns, we'll be his witnesses in Jerusalem, all Judea and Samaria, and unto the ends of the earth. Thank you and may God bless each one of you abundantly.

Welcome to a TBN Townhall Special: The State of the Nation 2023. As we begin the new year, America is at a crossroads. From Capitol Hill to social media, to our nation's schools, the divide is growing between those who want to preserve America's Judeo-Christian heritage and the vision of our founders and those who seek to transform America to match their secular progressive worldview. You could say we're locked in a struggle for the very soul of our nation as those who hold traditional biblical beliefs are increasingly targeted and cancelled. For followers of Jesus there are many issues of concern, from inflation to crime, and lawlessness, to a growing mental health crisis among our kids, to wars and rumors of war at our doorstep. But perhaps the most important question is this: What can we, as Christians, do to be light in the darkness and set an example that our fellow Americans can follow? Over the next hour, we'll discuss the hot button issues that will affect all of our lives in 2023 and beyond. We'll take questions from our studio audience, and we'll have expert insights from an all-star panel: Governor Mike Huckabee, Host of "The Huckabee Show" here on TBN, and a former Republican presidential candidate. Eric Metaxas, Host of "The Eric Metaxas Radio Show" on TBN, and best-selling author of several books, including his latest, "Letter to the American Church." Sheila Walsh, Author, Speaker, Grammy-Nominated Recording Artist, and TBN Host. Dr. Rick Rigsby, Best-Selling Author, Internationally Recognized Motivational Speaker, Award-winning Journalist, and Host of the "How Ya' Livin' Podcast." CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Cash bail is used as a guarantee that a defendant will return to court for hearings or trial. While there are growing calls to reform the system, some say it pits the need for safety against the rights of the poor. In 2010, New York police arrested Kalief Browder for allegedly stealing a backpack in a Bronx neighborhood. Browder, who was 16 years old at the time, spent the next three years behind bars awaiting trial, something that never happened because Browder ended up taking his own life. His case points to a common problem for many who can't afford bond. According to The Civil Rights Implications of Cash Bail, a report by the US Commission on Civil Rights, more than 60 percent of defendants are detained pre-trial because they can't afford to post bail. Those numbers have moved several states to take action. For example, Illinois recently passed the "SAFE-T Act," legislation aimed at ending the state's cash bail system. On Saturday, the Illinois Supreme Court halted that law from taking effect on January 1. The law would do away with the state's cash bail system, but that's controversial because it would allow suspects charged with felonies, including second-degree murder, aggravated battery, and arson, to be released without bail. While supporters say the current bail system proves unfair to low-income defendants, Illinois law enforcement officials and prosecutors argue that it will let dangerous criminals back on the streets while sending the message that people can get away with breaking the law. Pastor Garland Hunt of The Father's House in Atlanta once served as president of Prison Fellowship and on the Georgia state board of pardons and paroles. He says while there are flaws in the criminal justice system, cash bail is needed in cases involving major crimes. As a former magistrate, Kate Trammell, Vice President of Advocacy at Prison Fellowship, is familiar with how the cash bail. She says low-income people can't always pay cash bail and end up having to stay in jail until trial, something she believes creates a two-tiered justice system. Trammell also pointed out other solutions that are fairer that don't raise safety concerns. According to the Prison Policy Initiative, there are also stark racial disparities surrounding pre-trial detention rates. Hunt said the media's portrayal of minorities also adds to the problem. Those are all reasons why Hunt believes the church's voice is needed for healing and confronting inequities in the system. It is a sentiment that Trammell shares. It is a process that many agree should provide safe communities and equity for all Americans.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Jonathan Fleming spent nearly 25 years in prison for a crime he didn't commit. In 1989, jurors convicted him of second-degree murder in the death of a New York drug dealer. Fleming, who also sold drugs and knew the man, said he had a solid alibi. But prosecutors argued that Fleming could have returned to Brooklyn to commit the crime. They also produced a witness who testified to seeing him pull the trigger. Fleming, however, was found guilty and spent the next 24 years of his life behind bars. Fleming said that anger consumed him until an experience he had at a church service behind bars. It was a spiritual transformation that answered long time prayers for Fleming's ex-wife Patricia Johnson. Fleming called her to tell her that he had changed. Fleming spent years trying to prove his innocence and a break finally came when new investigators along with Brooklyn's Conviction Review Unit took his case. Attorney's found evidence proving Fleming could not have been in New York at the time of the murder; information authorities never turned over to his defense team. These investigative teams, also known as Integrity Review Units, are spreading across the country. And in 2018 alone, statistics show they helped free 58 wrongfully convicted people. The eyewitness who said she saw Fleming commit the crime also recanted, and newly found witnesses implicated someone else in the murder. An Integrity Review Unit in Georgia helped to free Darrell Hall, who in 1991, had been sentenced to life in prison for possessing two grams of cocaine. Media mogul Tyler Perry gave Hall a job at his Atlanta studios. In Fleming's case, justice arrived on April 8, 2014, after almost 25 long years behind bars. While Fleming is grateful for the work of attorneys and investigators, he said the real credit goes to the Lord. That included letting go of the anger he had towards those responsible for robbing him of nearly 25 years of his life, including time he missed with his mother who passed away shortly after his release. Fleming's story, the subject of an upcoming book entitled, "24/7: Wrongfully Convicted, Rightfully Released," has already been an inspiration. Meanwhile, the state of New York awarded Fleming $6 million dollars for his wrongful incarceration. He now hopes to help others through the Jonathan Fleming Foundation.

CBN Reporter Tara Mergener Reports: Just when you think the crisis at the southern border can't get worse, it does. More than two years into the Biden presidency, illegal crossings have soared month after month to numbers never seen in the U.S. Critics were skeptical about the handful of policies the administration announced in January ahead of his first trip to the border in well over a decade. The costs and consequences of this migration tsunami are far-reaching as communities across America are left holding the bag. Meanwhile, as the crisis has spiraled out of control over the past two years, the face of migration has been changing dramatically. Emboldened by a broken immigration system and lack of enforcement, migrants swarmed across the southern border more than a quarter million times in December alone. When you look at the numbers since President Biden took office, an estimated 3 to 5 million are believed to have breached the border with more migrants on the way. Smugglers are also cashing in by helping migrants from more than 55 countries bypass authorities. In recent months, data shows the wave is traveling much further to get here. Historically citizens of Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador, collectively known as Central America's northern triangle, as well as Mexico, have accounted for most illegal immigration. In a dramatic shift, migrants from Cuba, Venezuela, Nicaragua, and other countries once barely represented are also being processed at unprecedented levels. In another noticeable change, most of those coming are no longer families, but single men. Still most of these breadwinners will not be able to legally work here. Meanwhile, from Texas to Arizona, and D.C. to New York, communities are scrambling for space and resources. Each migrant costs an estimated $9,000 per year for housing, food, medical, and other social services. A total of $20+ billion and counting has been spent since Biden became president, which is $4 billion more than Donald Trump's border wall. That tally is expected to keep climbing as word spreads that the southern border is open for business despite the administration's claims to the contrary.

CBN Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: Is humanity in danger from new artificial intelligence technology? Some tech experts fear it could be. Hundreds of leaders in the tech industry are calling for a pause in the development and testing of artificial intelligence technology so that the risks can be properly studied. An open letter signed by the leading voices in tech is calling for a 6-month pause in development, warning that language-based models like ChatGPT which generate human-like responses could one day attempt to replace humans and even try to rule the world. Tech leader Elon Musk warned about artificial intelligence in a 2018 interview. The release of OpenAI's chatbot has sparked a multi-billion-dollar race between Microsoft and Google to offer competitors. Christian author and faith leader Johnnie Moore is asking religious leaders to support the pause and also ask the tough questions about ethics and morality. AI expert Eliezer Yudkowsky warns that the open letter doesn't go far enough, saying "literally everyone on Earth will die" if AI is allowed to advance unchecked. George Lucas, who taught military ethics at the Naval Academy, says ethics always lag behind new technology. Concerns about the technology range from mass unemployment as AI replaces workers, to a widespread loss of privacy to weapons systems that independently decide who they should kill. Interpol has issued a new report warning that the technology could be misused for fraud, cybercrime, disinformation, and social engineering.

The Eric Metaxas Show #163	24:30	24:30	REC	PA/O/E	2/10/2023 2/12/2023	6:00 PM 10:00 PM

Today on The Eric Metaxas Radio Show: David Bahnsen, Founder and Chief Investment Officer of The Bahnsen Group, and Author of his new book, "There's No Free Lunch: 250 Economic Truths," just recently launched a video series called "No Free Lunch" about free markets and why that's good. He explains the word 'capitalism' originated with Karl Marx for the ideology of Adam Smith. It was an implied class envy term, and certainly a class struggle pitting those who own capital against humanity. David shares that his entire belief about free enterprise and his entire enthusiasm for what free markets have done to advance the cause of a more advanced civilization, a better society, higher quality of life is rooted in the human person. When we use the word 'capitalism' we sometimes concede a point. He believes capital is an important tool. Capital accumulation is a means to an end, and the end is this cause of a human flourishing, a shalom, a better life. Instead of using the word 'capitalism' David uses free enterprise, free society, and, as referenced by Father Sirico at the Action Institute, the free and virtuous society. That's the struggle we're in right now; those who believe freedom and virtue are in a tension, but you cannot have one without the other. David believes that freedom and virtue are pro-cyclical. How do people become good people? This is a fundamental difference. Do you get better institutions to create better moral formation with less liberty or more liberty? What he thought was settled in the twentieth century, the failure of totalitarianism, of Marxism, of socialism, got a second wind post the financial crisis. His starting point for defending markets is that all people were created by God to produce. A market is just two people in a free exchange. Allocate scarce resources. God made the world a certain way. Markets are the right way for us to freely administer and ultimately cultivate our gifts for the advancement of humanity. Milton Friedman, who's sort of the patron saint of defending markets in the 20th century, told us that economic freedom does not automatically create political freedom or civic freedom. It is insufficient, but it is necessary. David talks about the concept "There's no free lunch" that originated in the El Paso newspaper in the 1930's and was made more famous by Milton Friedman. It refers to the idea that you can't get something for nothing. But David adds that you can't get something you want without getting rid of something you want. Kids seem to understand this better than adults. God made the world with scarcity and there was a need to allocate resources. That's what no free lunch means and that's what markets fundamentally are about. One of our scarce resources is time.

Tonight on Praise: Expanding the Mission with Robert Morris. Senior Pastor of Gateway Church, and Best-Selling Author, Robert Morris shares how and why he wrote the book "The Blessed Life" and began teaching that we get to give, we don't give to get. God wants to prosper us for the right reason; so that we can be a blessing. We are the most like God when we give even when we're not going to get anything in return. He tells us true riches are people (souls). Christian television is the largest missionary organization in the world. Pastor Morris shares that to become a generous giver we must deal with a selfish heart, deal with a grieving heart, develop a generous heart, and develop a grateful heart. Everything we have came from the Lord. In the same way God gave His Son, the most extravagant gift we can ever give God is ourselves by making Him Lord of our life. Matt and Laurie tell viewers our gift this month is "Thank you."

Tonight on Praise: The collapse of Silicon Valley Bank, the second largest bank failure in U.S. History, has sent shockwaves across the financial industry. The bank catered to many of the world's most powerful tech investors. The speed of its unraveling is astounding. Forty-eight hours prior to the collapse, the bank announced that it had suffered a 1.8-billion-dollar loss and urgently needed to raise more capital to address depositor concerns. The market reacted sharply and SVB lost over 160 billion dollars in value in just twenty-four hours. As the stock fell, depositors moved quickly to withdraw their money from the bank. Because banks only carry a portion of depositors money in cash, this meant that SVB couldn't give depositors their money. Imagine that. Going to your bank to get your money and there is no money to get. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation responded by stepping in and taking over SVB in order to get depositors access to their money. The news of banks collapsing adds another component to these unsettling times on top of worries over inflation, high grocery and gas prices, cost of housing. Last week during a house oversight committee hearing on COVID origin, Dr. Robert Redfield, the Former Head of the U.S. Centers of Disease Control and Prevention, told lawmakers that Anthony Fauci sidelined him from internal debates about the origin of COVID-19 at the start of the pandemic. During a separate house hearing on the weaponization of the federal government, journalists detailed how social media companies like Twitter and Facebook developed a formal system for taking in moderation requests from government agencies, including the FBI, Department of Homeland Security, and the Department of Health and Human Services, resulting in the censoring of certain viewpoints. We are living in a season where institutions that have long been trusted are proving unreliable. Yet in the midst of this instability, something spectacular is happening in our universities and the entertainment industry. Light is shining in places least expected. The flame of revival which started in Asbury is reaching more young people as it spreads to both Christian and secular universities and campuses, churches, and youth events. And now a divine outpouring is hitting theaters across the nation through the movie "Jesus Revolution." The film starring Kelsey Grammar continues to outperform expectations, making forty million dollars at the box office. Stories of lives being changed at movie theaters are emerging. There is a spiritual awakening taking place in this generation. The search for truth is underway. As Christians, how do we discern the times and what pivotal role do we play in this season? Let's join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz now as they discuss the pressing matters of our day from a Christian worldview.

Building Wealth in 2023 with Dave Ramey: Dave Ramsey shares statistics that eight in ten Americans are worried about the economy. Inflation is at a forty-year high in 2022. 3.98 million people a month quit their jobs in 2021 and 4 million a month in 2022. Thirty-seven percent of Americans are struggling or in crisis with their finances. Twenty-five percent of Americans say they're relying on credit to make ends meet. Four in ten Americans say they have zero in savings. Half of Americans say their finances have a negative impact on their mental health. Eighty-two percent of Americans are somewhat or extremely worried about their student loan payments. Dave tells us when we have an "I've had it!" moment, we're about ready to change our life. If we will live like no one else, later, we can live and give like no one else. He encourages us to begin to build wealth so that we can change our family tree. George Kamel shows us how building margin provides options, how options provide freedom, and freedom provides peace. Rachel Cruz explains how to survive the stock market ride.

CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: The U.S. military received the equivalent of a failing grade from an annual report that assesses the country's defense. For the first time since it began in 2015, The Heritage Foundation's nonpartisan "Index of U.S. Military Strength" released a "weak" rating. Inflation, a recruiting crisis, aging equipment, and years of budget cuts are all key factors weighing into this year's report. Heritage's conclusion: the United States military is not prepared to meet the current threat environment of an increasingly dangerous world. The Index's editor Dakota Wood says the "weak" rating is meant to convey a level of gravity. Breaking down the findings by branch: the Army comes in at "marginal," seen as aging faster than it's modernizing and much smaller than needed. The Navy is rated as "weak," with a rapidly decreasing fleet. A similar rating for the Space Force, which lacks the capacity to manage the explosive growth in space we're seeing from other countries. The Air Force rates lowest at "very weak," due to retention issues and aging equipment. The only bright spot among the branches is the Marine Corps, which has a "strong" rating, having adapted well to the needs of today. U.S. nuclear capability is also rated and determined to be "strong," thanks to a bi-partisan commitment to modernization in that area. Wood says, as of today, the US military as a whole would struggle to meet the demands of a single major conflict, let alone engage on multiple fronts. He says while funding is the ultimate problem, it's also the solution. In order to get the military back to fighting strength, spending would need to increase. Meaning the defense budget needs to start coming in significantly over the rate of inflation. The 2023 Defense Authorization bill gives the military a record $858 billion, $45 billion more than President Biden requested. While that keeps pace with inflation, Wood says it falls short of what's really needed. America's adversaries, meanwhile, are steadily increasing investments into their military might. U.S. Rep Mike Waltz (R) Florida, a House Armed Services Committee member, told CBN News it's time for the U.S. to stop playing catch up. Wood warns that's usually easier said than done, as it would require Congress to prioritize projects that won't show immediate benefits. Wood hopes the ongoing war in Ukraine will remind lawmakers of how expensive war would be with another major power. Far different from what the U.S. military faced over the last two decades in the Middle East. When it comes to recommendations, he says he would be encouraged by a substantial, and consistent, investment in munitions, especially since the U.S. has provided Ukraine with more than a quarter of our supply. Then, over the coming years, Wood suggests more significant increases to the defense budget, and a renewed focus on expanding the military's capacity.

CBN Washington Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: Recession is imminent. That's the clear consensus among U.S. economists. Although the Federal Reserve's work to bring down inflation has led to a slight drop, prices are expected to keep climbing. There's a growing belief the Fed missed the mark, overreacting to put the country right into a recession. One key factor in all of this is the money supply. In 2020, fear over a pandemic shutdown prompted the Federal Reserve to begin pumping more than $6 trillion into the U.S. economy to combat unemployment and promote economic growth. Congress injected close to another $6 trillion in stimulus-related spending. The result was an over-stimulated economy. Johns Hopkins Economics Professor Steve Hanke, a former advisor to President Ronald Reagan, says the reason for today's high inflation is that the money supply grew so quickly during the COVID economy of 2020 and 2021. Hanke believes the Federal Reserve got this one wrong. As the Fed rapidly raises interest rates, many businesses are hurting, and much less money is going into the economy. Hanke says it's now just a matter of watching the recession play out. Hanke anticipates recession to begin around the end of this year and predicts inflation will continue throughout 2023. In the meantime, he's largely ignoring economic headlines such as job reports, the dollar's status, the stock market, and unemployment numbers. Hanke is simply watching the money supply. While he can't predict the length of a recession, Hanke believes it will be significantly worse if the Fed keeps raising interest rates. He recommends a pivot that would allow smaller economic growth, rather than continuing to seek contraction.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: COVID disruptions to the global supply chain revealed the world’s largest tech battle is for semiconductors, the key to dominating international technology and computing power. Semiconductor chips are basically the brains of modern electronics. You might be surprised that the United States isn’t the world leader in this multi-billion-dollar industry – it’s not even second. The U.S. government’s goal is simply to stay ahead of China. Experts are calling it the ‘chip war,’ and Taiwan is stuck at the center of this fight for the world’s most critical technology. The small island of Taiwan clearly dominates the world’s semiconductor market. The single manufacturer Chang refers to is TSMC, Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company – and Apple is its biggest customer. Tufts University Associate Professor, Chris Miller authored “Chip War, The Fight for the World’s Most Critical Technology.” He tells CBN News the Taiwanese company’s dominance in semiconductors makes OPEC’s 40% share of world oil production pale by comparison. The chip industry is made possible by a symbiotic relationship among key countries that forms a very complex supply chain. America, the world’s largest market, also makes up almost 40% of the total value of this international supply machine. It’s clearly an intertwined international process. Just three years ago, China’s tech giant “Huawei” was TSMC’s number two customer. Then, the Trump administration tightened restrictions preventing the company from getting chips developed by the U.S. due to espionage and national security concerns. More importantly, Miller says the microchip has revolutionized American warfare. Semiconductors made in Taiwan are used in F-35 fighter jets – and a wide range of U.S. military-grade weapons and defense systems. Since the world’s entire tech ecosystem can’t function without these chips, that makes the sovereign island ground zero for a chip war between the U.S. and China. That’s what makes the communist government’s “Made in China 2025” plan to make the country dominant in global high-tech manufacturing a true threat to the U.S., both economically and militarily. It’s one reason the U.S. finally responded with the Chips Act, pouring out billions of dollars to bring chip manufacturing and research back to the U.S. TSMC has committed at least $12 billion to build a chip fabrication plant in Arizona, starting in 2024. Still, neither China nor the U.S. can overtake Taiwan’s production efforts and achieve self-sufficiency anytime soon. Nathan Picarsic with Foundation for Defense of Democracies says accessibility and proximity to chips is key in striving towards self-sufficiency and also strengthening national security. While Taiwan has maintained its sovereignty for more than 70 years, China still considers the island nation its property and regularly provokes it militarily. Given China’s authoritarian use of technology against its own people and the potential power of semiconductors, the battle to control the world’s technology and data is paramount. This evolving technology makes semiconductors even more of a national security concern, especially with progress in artificial intelligence and quantum computing. The chip war is well underway, exactly how hostile this war becomes remains to be seen.

Praise Greg Laurie: Jesus Revolution Film #30223	55:30	55:30	REC	PA/O/E	3/2/2023	10:00 PM

Tonight on Praise: Greg Laurie, Founder and Pastor of Harvest Christian Fellowship, along with his wife, Cathe Laurie, Founder and Director of Virtue Women’s Ministry, and Jon Erwin, Filmmaker of “Jesus Revolution,” discuss revival. Almost Fifty years ago, Greg and Cathe were part of one of the greatest spiritual awakenings in American history called the ‘Jesus Movement’ that changed a generation. This story is being told in a new film in theaters now called “Jesus Revolution.” In this exclusive episode of Praise, they break down this film that is shattering all box office expectations. But more importantly, they reveal the real-life stories of those who were there and lived the Jesus Movement. Their hope is to see a revival of this magnitude happen again in this generation. Some wonder if it has already begun. We hear about students praying for hours on end at Asbury University. We see Superbowl ads talk about Jesus. Revival outbreaks are happening at other campuses as well. There’s no decade that closely parallels the late sixties and early seventies than the moment we’re living in right now. Back then, there were riots in the streets, racial division, and fear of a nuclear war. Today, we see conflicts in the world and our own president uses the word Armageddon in a sentence. There’s the drug epidemic and the sexual revolution. Cathe shares the CDC released a new report showing thirty percent of all young women have contemplated suicide and are depressed. Cathe believes they are looking for purpose and meaning, a real connection in community. The same things they were looking for are the same things that GenZs are looking for today. Erwin believes that when we are at our lowest, that is when God breaks through. If he did it before, he’ll do it again. To be a part of what God is doing is amazing right now.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: The Great Dismal Swamp once covered more than a million acres between northeastern North Carolina and southeastern Virginia. Between 1620 and the time of the Civil War, the swamp served as a thriving refuge for runaway slaves who chose to build their lives in freedom no matter the conditions. As many as 50,000 runaway slaves called maroons, an indigenous term, settled in the swamp on small rises of land known as mesic island. The escaped slaves established hidden communities in the heavily treed wetlands, building cabins and possibly farming small plots of land. Researchers believe the former slaves fed their families by hunting deer, wild turkeys, and other game, skills they may have learned from Native Americans who also sought shelter here. The runaways went to great lengths to keep their settlements secret, due to fear of being captured by slave owners. Dr. Dan Sayers, an archeologist at American University studied the maroon islands for more than ten years. Sayers realized he was onto a significant discovery and explained other artifacts found at the site. As a direct descendant of a slave who helped build the Great Dismal Swamp, Eric Sheppard of Newport News, Virginia, shares a personal connection to its history. Grandy traveled the swamp's canal and learned to navigate boats as logging operations and trade expanded at the site. He and other slaves dug the canal and several ditches by hand. After arranging to buy his freedom, Grandy dictated his story, sharing about life as a slave and working in the swamp in his narrative called, "Narrative of the Life of Moses Grandy, Late a Slave in the United States of America." He was sure to not mention his interactions with escaped slaves living deep in the swamp. While many runaway slaves made the swamp their home, others saw it as just a stop on their journey north, as part of the Underground Railroad. In 2004, the refuge was designated an important landmark on the National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom. It was the freedom maroons in the swamp preferred to living in captivity. Sheppard believes those who made their lives in the swamp were from the Zambia and Angola regions of Africa and were able to survive because of similar terrain. As a member of the Strategic Tourism Partnership between the Great Dismal Swamp National Wildlife Refuge and the Brotese Royal Establishment in Western Province, Zambia, Sheppard travels to Africa often. During trips that have become known as "homecomings," he has learned more about his ancestors who were taken captive from the region and brought to America as slaves. Meanwhile, when slavery ended in 1863, maroons living in the swamp were free to leave. Many moved to the surrounding communities of Chesapeake, Suffolk, and Norfolk, Virginia. It is a time in American history many compare to the biblical account of Israel's deliverance from bondage.

CBN Senior Washington Correspondent Jennifer Wishon Reports: Many scholars describe religious freedom as the foundation for all other human rights, but increasingly in America it's under attack. That's leading one group on a quest to educate the nation's students. Today, of course, religious freedom is a regular topic at the high court. For the last few years, Becket Law has kept an index on American Attitudes about this First Amendment protection. That's where America's First Freedom Curriculum comes in. Written by the Religious Freedom Institute, the high school curriculum complies with national social studies standards and consists of five lessons written to supplement U.S. history, world geography, and political science classes. A version for middle school students will be released this year and plans for elementary students are in the works. The goal is to arm next-generation leaders with knowledge about the one freedom that protects conscience, allows Americans to live out their faith, and makes the nation stronger. America's founders placed religious freedom at the top of the Bill of Rights. Countries that strongly protect religious liberty are more peaceful and economically stable, which benefits all citizens. Even if an education gap exists, Becket's latest information shows Americans have good instincts in this area which is generally good news for people of faith.

Many feel that this coincides with the launch and popularity of many of the social media apps and platforms. Most young people don't realize that social media sites are not accurate representations of the authentic lives of those using them. Meet young people who tell their stories of how they attempted to end their lives but lived to tell about it!

Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: Andrew McDiarmid, Senior Fellow with the Discovery Institute in Seattle, Washington, and Host of Simply Scottish Podcast, talks about an article he wrote in "The New York Times Opinion" titled "If You make one resolution in 2023, it should be this: experts." He shares that when we bring the whole world into our pocket it is a real temptation, a blessing in some ways, and it can also be a curse if we are not a "tech boss." Andrew encourages people to become their own "tech boss" because many are living very reflexively as opposed to reflectively. Who are we? This is a problem especially for young people, but also everyone who uses these gadgets. Andrew tells us we really do need a sabbath. He recommends taking back the first and last hours of your day. Those hours belong to you and your maker. Don't turn it on right away. Do some thinking, do some reflecting. Do some thinking about your near and far future, and just turn inward so that you can outward experience a better place. Do less on your gadgets (phone, tablet, laptop). Take your nose out of the screen, pick a few things that you like to do, and that will give your mind and your body an excuse to start thinking. Generally, pull yourself out of the screen, give yourself twenty minutes a day or more and do something that allows for your mind to wander.

Tonight on Praise: Joel and Victoria Osteen, "New York Times" Best-Selling Authors, and Senior Pastors of Lakewood Church, share Joel's new book "Your Greater is Coming." We all go through difficulties. In Psalm 71, David tells us God allowed him to suffer much hardship, but God will restore him to even greater honor. God doesn't say we won't ever go through any hardship, have tough times, or have people come against us. The promise is although we go through some of those things, we will come out with "greater". Greater honor. Greater strength. Greater experience. Greater faith. Greater peace. Greater joy. Greater influence. Greater resources. Greater health. Greater relationships. Greater creativity. Greater favor. It's about not getting stuck in the disappoint but going to the promise believing that God has something greater coming. Develop a 'greater' mentality. Get rid of excuses. Let go of baggage from the past. Get rid of a victim mentality. Keep doing the right thing. Change the atmosphere. Pay attention to our inner dialogue. These are tests we must pass. When we don't get bitter and lose our joy it allows God to entrust us with more. God has a set time to bring things to pass. Go into the new year with a new mindset. Look forward. Joel and Victoria compare our difficulties with Sequoia trees going through a fire, surviving the fire, multiplying their seed, and ultimately becoming fireproof. We must be careful how we think because our thoughts run our life. Our life is going to follow our thoughts. It's important to pay attention to what we're thinking. Think about what God says about us. Pass the test and let challenges fuel your future. Enjoy the journey each day. Focus on the goodness of God. Trust Him and His timing. Greater is coming.

Praise Presents Rick Warren Purpose Driven Life #7	54:15	54:15	REC	PA/O/E	1/31/2023	2:00 AM
--	-------	-------	-----	--------	-----------	---------

Tonight on Praise: Rick Warren, Founder of Saddleback Church, Pastor, and "New York Times" Best-Selling Author of "The Purpose Driven Life: What on Earth Am I Here For?" tells us there is no more fundamental question than 'why am I alive?' He asks the question of existence (why am I alive?) significance (does my life matter?) and purpose (what am I here for?). He explains God's five purposes for our lives: 1. You're planned for God's pleasure. 2. You're formed for God's family. 3. You're created to become like Christ. 4. You're shaped to serve God. 5. You're made for a mission. To fulfill these five purposes love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength (worship) and love your neighbor as yourself (service). Let God love you because we were created for God to love. Pastor Rick shares his personal pain when his wife, Kay, had cancer, and when his son, Matthew, struggled with mental illness and committed suicide. Out of their greatest pain, Pastor Rick and his wife, Kay, began ministering to families with mental illness and families struggling with the suicide of a family member. Pastor Rick expresses the importance of recognizing the deeper the pain, the fewer words should be used. Simply show up and shut up; this is the ministry of presence. Pastor Rick encourages viewers to use their pain to help others.

Tonight at Harvest Crusade 2023: Pastor Greg Laurie tells us that America is at a crossroads. Crime is up, drug use is up, hopelessness is up. Pastor Greg shares that the times we are living in now remind him of the late sixties and early seventies. Drug use is up, marijuana and LSD use is up dramatically. More Americans are smoking pot than cigarettes right now. This has led to a full-blown opioid epidemic. There has been a three hundred percent increase in fentanyl deaths. 300 people a day die from fentanyl. This young generation today is looking for answers. Self-harm is up 334%. Overdoses are up 119%. Anxiety and depression is up. The US suicide rate has increased dramatically since the year 2000 and it has tripled for young girls. Maybe that's why one expert dubbed generation Z the hopeless generation. This is our wakeup call. It's time to pray. Pastor Greg tells us the ultimate hope for America is a spiritual solution. We need another Jesus revolution, and we need to start praying for it now. We need a revival.

Today on It is Written with John Bradshaw: Pastor Bradshaw tells us there are healthcare challenges facing millions and millions of people today. Remarkably, there are often some very simple things that you can do to minimize your risk or to get out from under that health burden. The Bible is a book that encourages us to take our health seriously. Dr. David DeRose, President of CompassHealth Consulting joins Pastor Bradshaw to discuss the subject of obesity. There are three-quarters of Americans that are impacted by this disorder. It's not just obesity, medically speaking; it's also overweight. It's affecting 1 in 5 of our youth which now meet the definition for being significantly overweight. Some simple changes are not having so much screen time and drink primarily water. Even losing five percent of one's weight can make a measurable difference in these metabolic diseases. Eating more whole plant foods can fill us up with fewer calories. CBN National Security Correspondent Eric Philips Reports: Suicides are reaching epidemic proportions, and the numbers in the US military are up for the fifth year in a row. It's reaching across generations affecting current troops, veterans, and families. Kim Ruocco knows this from personal experience. Her husband took his life while at the height of his military career. Major John Ruocco served as a Marine Corps pilot for 15 years. A really good one according to his wife, Kim, and the accolades don't stop there. It's a battle he lost in 2005. A social worker by profession, Kim often sensed subtle changes in her husband's behavior during phone calls. John became part of a growing statistic of active military and veterans who have committed suicide. The latest Pentagon research shows increases over the last five years with more than 500 military suicides in 2018 alone. A Veterans Administration report indicates some 6,000 veteran suicides each year between 2005 and 2017. Dr. Heather Kelly is director of military and veterans' health policy at the American Psychological Association. But there is help. After her husband's death, Ruocco started the Assistance Program for Survivors or TAPS. On the prevention side, the American Bible Society has rolled out the "God Understands Campaign" to help service members who are battling depression and other mental health challenges. It includes testimonies from people like Bryan Flanery who attempted suicide while in the army. Gordon Groseclose, a retired Army Chaplain who works with the God Understands Campaign, says social distancing in these times only magnifies feelings of isolation, and that could cause the already growing suicide numbers among service members to spike. He says the campaign provides a unique human and divine connection. In fact, experts say faith is what's called a "protective factor" when it comes to suicide. In other words, those who identify with all faiths are at a lower risk for suicide.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Perhaps you've noticed all the messages on social media, or the numerous products at the store, suggesting mothers of young children need to drink alcohol, and lots of it, to cope with the pressures of raising children. If you yourself are a young mom, chances are you're being pressured to drink as part of the role. It's called "Mommy Wine Culture," and while it's pervasive throughout American society, a growing number of mothers are pushing back against it. The troubling messages often try to be humorous and appear on merchandise like baby clothes saying, "Mommy Drinks Because I Cry," wine glasses with the phrase "Mommy's Sippy Cup" written on them, and adult t-shirts with "Coffee, Hocky Mom, Wine, Repeat" emblazoned on the front. Then there are all the memes like "The Most Expensive Part of Having Kids is All the Wine You Have to Drink." As it turns out, the messaging reflects reality. Moms with young children are turning to alcohol, like Kelley Manley, who always felt "Mommy Wine Culture" was problematic, but drank with other mothers anyway, as a way to fit-in with them. Manley said she was shocked to discover mothers drinking around their children at nearly every conceivable occasion. Wine doesn't take center stage only at in-person events like a child's birthday party or play date, but young moms even bond over booze online, such as the "Moms Who Need Wine" Facebook group. Psychotherapist Ann Dowsett Johnston, best-selling author of "Drink: The Intimate Relationship Between Women and Alcohol," told CBN News today's young mothers are under an enormous amount of pressure, as they shoulder much of the family's emotional labor, what she calls "the third shift." She points out that while the struggles of mothers of growing children are very real, the idea that alcohol is the remedy, is a lie. Johnston said decades ago, moms drinking together while caring for their children was practically unheard of, but things began to change in the 1990s when the alcohol industry ushered in what she calls the "pinking of the market," by manufacturing and advertising booze aimed specifically at women. Historically, men consumed the most alcohol, but now, women are catching up, with serious consequences. In the last 15 years, the greatest increase in consumption has been among women in their thirties and forties. Biological differences between the sexes cause women to absorb more alcohol and take longer to metabolize it than men. That means the same amount of alcohol typically damages a woman's body more than a man's. According to the CDC, after drinking the same amount of alcohol, women tend to have higher blood alcohol levels than men, and the effects usually occur more quickly and last longer in women. Alcohol also makes women more susceptible than men to liver disease, heart disease, cancer, cognitive decline, and sexual violence. U.S. health officials recommend women should drink no more than five ounces of wine a day. Canadian health officials go further, saying only two five-ounce glasses per week. In addition to the physical risks, there are psychological ones, as well, which is why Kelley Manley stopped drinking. She's not alone. More moms are rejecting Mommy Wine Culture and turning to groups like Sober Mom Squad founded by Emily Paulson. Paulson said Sober Mom Squad is an online place where moms can meet online, and it sometimes connects people who live near each other so they can get together in person. Manley said rejecting Mommy Wine Culture can sometimes lead to a social shift. Some mothers take issue with Mommy Wine Culture because they're concerned about the culture's impact on a child's self-esteem. So while pop culture and Big Alcohol try to convince new moms that life is better with booze, a growing number are rejecting that message for the sake of their own health as well as their family.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Whether we're worried about the cost of living, anxious over daily disappointments like traffic jams, or overwhelmed by negative thoughts, stress can prove toxic to our bodies. Stress activates a potent combination of hormones that influence things like our heart rate, digestion, and fat storage. Medical research increasingly points to the ill health effects that can be triggered by chronic, sustained stress, such as heightened risk for obesity, heart disease, diabetes, depression, and dementia. Dr. Epel researches how stress can damage the body, and says it goes all the way down to the cellular level. Stress triggers a chain reaction in the body that can end up shortening the telomeres – the protective caps at the ends of our chromosomes. Short telomeres often predict earlier onset of disease and death. The good news is we can turn things around before our telomeres become too short. In her book "The Stress Prescription," Dr. Epel recommends these seven ways to reduce stress.

1. Embrace uncertainty. Research during the COVID-19 pandemic showed people who reported being okay with the uncertainty of the outcome, people who said they were okay not knowing how the pandemic would end, reported much less stress than those who weren't. Epel recommends trying to avoid worrying about tomorrow, and instead focusing on the concerns of today.
2. Let go of what you can't control. Dr. Epel referenced the traditional Serenity Prayer that deals with this practice. That prayer is attributed to American theologian Reinhold Niebuhr. It was part of a sermon at the Health Evangelical Union Church in Massachusetts in 1932 and has since become a fixture in Alcoholics Anonymous and other 12-step programs.
3. Find excitement in challenges. Stress can be minimized when we turn our feelings of fear into feelings of being fierce. That involves reframing our thoughts. For example, instead of thinking, "This is so stressful, I hate this feeling," try to embrace, "This is exciting! I can appreciate this feeling!" Turn down the heat by replacing fatalistic thoughts like, "If I don't pull this off, everything will be ruined," to "I can only do my best, everything else is out of my control." When facing a challenge, it helps to relax by remembering past success and believing you have what it takes to meet the current challenge.
4. Metabolize body stress. Certain physical activities can actually help our bodies train for resilience. Dr. Epel recommends practicing "hormetic stress," which induces short, concentrated bursts of acute stress, the kind you can easily and naturally recover from. These include exercise, particularly high intensity interval training (HIIT), a blast of cold water for anywhere from 15 seconds to one minute at the end of a shower, and intense heat, such as sitting in a hot sauna for about a half an hour. Dr. Epel says these things help us "stress better," by "not having an over-activated stress response."
5. Immerse yourself in nature. Getting away from our computers and phones and all the care of the world they encapsulate can instantly reduce stress. Unplugging from regular life by going outside to a park, the woods, a river, lake, or ocean and focusing on the natural beauty and miracle of nature can help reduce blood pressure and anxiety. Believe it or not, we can also create similar sanctuaries in our own homes that can accomplish the same results. These include things like a prayer closet, where we can get away from the day-to-day cares of this life and focus on the big picture.
6. Experience deep rest. This involves slowing our normal breathing pattern so more oxygen crosses the barrier between our lungs and our blood vessels, causing nitric oxide levels to rise, which causes blood vessels to dilate, letting blood and oxygen travel more quickly through the body. This causes our blood pressure to go down, and our heart rate to drop, both of which point to reduced stress levels. Dr. Epel recommends regularly getting a good night's sleep and during the day, practicing breathing exercises, inhaling slowly through the nose with the mouth closed, deeply, so the ribs widen to the sides, and slowly exhaling through the mouth.
7. Create bliss bookends. This involves starting an ending each day feeling full of joy. This can be accomplished by waking up with a sense of gratitude and concentrating on what you're looking forward to that day. Then at the end of each day, think of the many things for which you are grateful and focus on the positive things that happen during the course of the day. In between the morning and evening "bookends," make a conscious effort to connect with people. So while we can't eliminate many of the stressors in our lives, we can respond to them differently, and hopefully feel a greater sense of peace and joy while lowering our risk for a number of health problems.

CBN White House Correspondent Abigail Robertson Reports: Both sides of the abortion issue are waiting for a federal judge in Texas to rule on a lawsuit that could force the FDA to withdraw chemical abortion pills from the market. This case follows the FDA's decision to expand access to the two-part drug regimen, allowing doctors to prescribe it via telehealth appointments for women to receive the abortion-inducing pills through the mail. The Texas lawsuit claims mifepristone, the first of the two drugs taken to induce abortion, is not as safe as advertised and should not have received FDA approval back in 2000. These chemical procedures currently account for more than 50% of all abortions in the United States. For many years, the FDA sought to expand access to the two-part at-home pill regimen even though a number of doctors and medical organizations question its safety and its approval more than two decades ago. Dr. Skop says it was initially approved under a category called "subpart h" which is for drugs that treat life-threatening illnesses. The FDA first approved mifepristone to terminate a pregnancy through seven weeks gestation in 2000 and then extended it through ten weeks gestation in 2016. Skop says a third of women who have chemical abortions are under 18, but claims the FDA didn't conduct a study on pediatric populations during the approval process. She also argues women who take abortion-inducing pills are not adequately prepared for what comes next. One in twenty women have a complication from chemical abortions, and Skop says she treated one of these women just last month. Last January, the FDA declared that abortion pills are safe enough to be prescribed through telehealth visits. The FDA also cleared the way for retail pharmacies like CVS and Walgreens to provide the medication for the first time. Brent Leatherwood from the Ethics and Religious Liberty Commission, says right out of the gate, many big pharmacy chains declared they'll sell the pill. Abortion advocates in West Virginia and North Carolina, where state laws restrict use of chemical abortions, have filed lawsuits claiming federal rules should prevail when it comes to setting drug standards. This is likely just the beginning of legal battles surrounding access to chemical abortions. Multiple states are pursuing laws that would either ban the sale of these abortion-inducing pills or stop women from accessing them without first visiting a doctor in person.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The week after the Daylight Savings Time switchover presents a challenge for most Americans, but for some, it can be life-threatening. Studies show a 24 percent increase in heart attacks the Monday after the time change, as well as a surge in hospitalizations due to irregular heartbeat. Doctors suspect it's related to the disruption of sleep. Heart disease is America's leading cause of death, accounting for 20 percent of all fatalities. In fact, the CDC estimates one person dies every 34 seconds in the United States from cardiovascular disease. The good news is heart disease is largely preventable for those who embrace a heart - healthy lifestyle. However, new research shows many Americans harbor misconceptions about the best way to do that. A new Cleveland Clinic survey reveals while most Americans correctly believe excess weight can contribute to heart disease, a whopping 71 percent don't know the best way to shed those extra pounds. When it comes to which diet is best for overall health, most people got that one wrong, too:

- 10% said a fast food diet is best,
- 37% chose low-fat,
- 35% said low-carbohydrate, and
- only 15% correctly identified the Mediterranean diet as the heart-healthiest.

Many people don't realize the Mediterranean diet consists of mostly fruits and vegetables, also known as "good carbs." A key portion of the Mediterranean diet involves consuming olive oil, widely considered a "healthy fat." When it comes to protein, the Mediterranean diet allows for beans, poultry, and fish. It's worth noting that does not include shellfish, which can be high in cholesterol. Red meat and pork are largely forbidden. Also noticeably absent from the Mediterranean diet are sugary foods and processed foods. Far too many Americans don't know their blood pressure or cholesterol numbers and don't realize these are two primary risk factors that can be controlled. Lastly, more people need to know there are other heart attack symptoms beyond chest pain and pressure. So while there is a lot we can do to lower our risk of heart disease, the first step is getting the right information.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: You've probably heard the phrase, "everything in moderation associated with consuming junk food. It can also hold true for certain superfoods like spinach, almonds, and raspberries. Many people may believe that if a food is good for us, then eating a lot of it is even better. However, in some cases, too much of a good thing can be bad, according to some health experts like nutritionist Salley K. Norton, MPH, author of "Toxic Superfoods: How Oxalate Overload is Making You Sick and How to Get Better." A number of our healthiest plant foods like spinach chia seeds, beets, and raspberries, are high in oxalate, an often harmless chemical compound, that for some people, proves problematic if consumed in large amounts. Other high oxalate foods that are typically consumed in high amounts include quinoa, beans, and almonds. Oftentimes, these foods play prominently in gluten-free or dairy-free diets. Oxalate can attach to the minerals in our body, and prevent these important nutrients from being absorbed. One example is calcium, which is necessary for strong bones. A calcium deficiency could lead to developing brittle bones, also known as osteoporosis. Eating a lot of these high-oxalate foods can also be tied to the formation of kidney stones. Sally Norton shared her personal health transformation in hopes that others may avoid the struggles she endured. For years, she wondered why she suffered from foot pain, sleep problems, arthritis, and more. At the same time, she ate a lot of potatoes and Swiss chard. When she stopped eating those high-oxalate foods, those health problems also stopped. She says other people who are suffering from unexplained physical or mental health problems might consider examining whether they could be eating too many high-oxalate foods. She recommends people who consume lots of high-oxalate food reduce their consumption of it or replace it altogether. One example is her instruction on how to reduce spinach and chard intake. Another example is people on gluten-free diets who tend to eat a lot of high-oxalate quinoa in place of wheat products. She suggests substituting teff or buckwheat for some or all of the quinoa being consumed.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: When it comes to our physical health, our lifestyle choices can play a large role in whether it's good or bad. For example, quitting smoking can improve our lung health, brushing and flossing our teeth goes a long way towards good dental health, and regular exercise can strengthen the heart. Good habits can also make a big difference when it comes to our mental health, according to psychiatrist Daniel Amen, a best-selling author and one of the founders of The Daniel Plan, a popular, faith-based health and weight loss program. In his new book, "Change Your Brain Every Day: Simple Daily Practices to Strengthen Your Mind, Memory, Moods, Focus, Energy, Habits, and Relationship," Dr. Amen describes dozens of lifestyle choices that can make a major difference in whether we experience either peace or anxiety, joy, or depression. Similar to a daily devotional, the book contains a year's worth of wisdom, with something to read each day, a total of 366 entries, to consider Leap Year. America is facing a mental health crisis unlike anything we've ever seen before. Far too many people struggle with depression, anxiety, and related issues. Another recent development includes the availability of constant news updates which can be a source of increased stress. Social media sites, another addition to the cultural landscape in the last decade or so, can prove emotionally harmful to adults and children. Dr. Amen draws on over 40 years of clinical practice with tens of thousands of patients, to provide the most effective daily habits for good mental health. Amen says the first step involves taking care of the brain, the organ that regulates our emotions and ideas. Dr. Amen said a brain-healthy diet consists of 70% fruits and vegetables and 30% good protein and healthy fat. Some examples are salmon and olive oil. Amen suggests avoiding processed foods and sweets. Another way to protect the brain is to keep it from being it. Dr. Amen says he treats some of his brain injury patients, like certain football players, with a protocol that includes fish oil, vitamin D and other brain-boosting supplements. Putting down our phones and instead, connecting in-person with nature and people can improve mental health. That's easier for some more than others. Screen management also goes a long way toward another habit that can dramatically improve mental health: getting a good night's sleep. Instead of letting our thoughts run wild, Dr. Amen recommends steering them in the right direction.
