DR. ALFRED PLECHNER, DVM joins the show today to discuss including the use of living clay. Veterinarian Alfred Plechner has been a vocal proponent of the under-diagnosis of hypoadrenalism and hypothyroidism in animals. Plechner has observed that excess estrogen aggravates the deficiency of thyroid and adrenal hormones and interferes with the fertilization process. Moreover, Plechner has observed that deficiency of thyroid and adrenal hormones as observed on blood studies is often accompanied by excess estrogen and decreased immunoglobulins, especially IgA.

RICHARD SCHICKEL began his 33-year career with the Internal Revenue Service as a tax collector, working the western suburbs of Chicago out toward the Mississippi River. He later moved to Tucson, AZ as a Senior Revenue Officer for Southern Arizona, where he now resides. During his tenure at the IRS, Richard was a mentor, coach and classroom instructor for hundreds of IRS Collection Employees. Today Richard will share secrets that the IRS does not Want You to Know. This one-of-a-kind story about life inside the most reviled and hated agency in the U.S. Government will have you reeling. Richard Schickel's memoir, "IRS Whistleblower", shares the secrets that the IRS does not want you to know; about its culture, its procedures, and how they train their employees to think. It tells for the first time in print about the Social Security Loophole that allows people who have never paid for Social Security to receive benefits for life.

2nd Hour: Open Lines

LEAP speaker LARRY KIRK joins TPH today to discuss Law Enforcement Against Prohibition. Larry is the chief of police for a small municipality in eastern Missouri. After 20 years in law enforcement, he realized that prohibition had dented neither demand nor supply of drugs, and he started to question whether drug policies were helping communities. "Drug prohibition creates a criminal atmosphere with a war over territory and product," he explains. "Ending prohibition would bring the ability to properly regulate and monitor a drug trade that occurs in the dark now. It would free the law enforcement officers of this country to target violent crimes and take the money out of the hands of criminal organizations." Larry, who has never used drugs and does not even use caffeine, tobacco or alcohol, is particularly bothered by the recent militarization of police departments. "The idea that we are now a 'paramilitary' organization has been detrimental to our profession," he says. "We have killed innocent people in a rush to keep the 'war on drugs' going. We are now making more and more violent confrontations with our fellow citizens and even the most common citizen now fears us."

2nd Hour: Open Lines

9/11 attack Demolition Supervisor, JOHN FEAL, joins The Power Hour to raise awareness for the sick 9/11 responders. In August of 2005, John started his own organization using his name, The FealGood Foundation. Their goal is "to spread awareness and educate the public about the catastrophic health effects on 9/11 first responders, as well as to provide assistance to relieve these great heroes of the financial burdens placed on them over the last five years. A secondary goal of our Foundation is to create a network of advocacy on 9/11 health care issues. We not only advocate for Ground Zero workers, but show others how they can advocate for themselves and help others through grassroots activism."

Medical Intuitive, LINDA EASTBURN, joins The Power Hour today to discuss the art of reading an individual's body and energy field.

New Power Mall Book: with Heart by Linda Eastburn

Linda Eastburn has written an engaging memoir describing her evolution into a gifted psychic and intuitive healer. Interspersed with thoughtful insights and personal reflections, this is a fascinating record of her journey that will entertain and enlighten those on a similar path. And in this time when the world is waking up to higher consciousness and our ultimate identity as spiritual beings, this path is one that we all must take. Her book is a useful guide from one who is slightly ahead of us along the path. It is a charming and reflective record of her own path, of what has worked and of the lessons she has learned, which may serve as a guide to those of us who seek to follow.

The science of how touch makes us happier

FROM

BARKING UP THE WRONG TREE

Eric Barker

September 7, 2016

You drastically underestimate the power of touch. Actually, I'm wrong...

The research says we're really big on touching — our phones, that is. People touch their phones 85 times a day.

But how many times a day do you touch someone else? Probably not nearly as

You need to touch people more. It will improve your life. Sound like Hallmark-Card-bumper-sticker-hippie-nonsense? Wrong.

What happens when babies are deprived of touch? It can screw them up for life. As David Linden, professor of neuroscience at Johns Hopkins University writes, "Touch is not optional for human development."

From Touch: The Science of Hand, Heart, and Mind:

But deprive a newborn of social touch, as occurred in grossly understaffed Romanian orphanages in the 1980s and 1990s, and a disaster unfolds: Growth is slowed, compulsive rocking and other self-soothing behaviors emerge, and, if not rectified, emergent disorders of mood, cognition, and self-control can persist through adulthood. Fortunately, even a relatively minor intervention — an hour per day of touch and limb manipulation from a caregiver — can reverse this terrible course if applied early in life. Touch is not optional for human development.

But you're not a baby, right? Doesn't matter. Linden says touch is still vital.

SUBSCRIBE

The answer is that interpersonal touch is a crucial form of social glue. It can bind partners into lasting couples. It reinforces bonds between parents and their children and between siblings. It connects people in the community and in the workplace, fostering emotions of gratitude, sympathy, and trust.

Saying that touch helps with relationships might seem obvious but the research shows touch improves nearly every area of your life. For instance: Want to know the secret to success they don't teach in any MBA program?

Kissing.

Yeah. Smooches. Don't worry; I'll explain.

Affection makes you successful

Am I recommending kissing in the office? No, not unless you find the chairs in the HR department comfy. But kissing before work? It might extend your life and boost your salary by 30 percent.

Via The Science of Kissing: What Our Lips Are Telling Us:

A 10-year psychology study undertaken in Germany during for work lived, on average, five years longer, earning 20 to 30 percent more than peers who left without a peck good-bye. The researchers also reported that not kissing one's wife before leaving in the morning increased the possibility of a car accident by 50 percent. Psychologists do not believe it's the kiss itself that accounts for the difference but rather that kissers were likely to begin the day with a positive attitude, leading to a healthier lifestyle.

Once you're at work the kisses need to stop — but that doesn't mean platonic touching should.

Need help on a project? Touch your coworker on the arm when you ask. They're far more likely to give you what you need:

A large number of studies has shown that touching someone on the upper arm for just a second or two can have a surprisingly significant effect on how much help they then provide... Similar work has shown that the same subtle touch also significantly increases the likelihood that people will sign petitions, leave a tip for waitstaff, participate in a supermarket taste test (which then in turn increases the and become involved in charity work.

And what does the research say about touching and teamwork? Next time you're watching a basketball game pay attention to which team high fives and fist bumps more often — because they're probably going to win:

The teams that touched the most cooperated the most, and won the most.

Some will say that's correlation, not causation. But how does neuroscientist David Linden interpret the findings? He thinks touching improves cooperation and performance.

From Touch: The Science of Hand, Heart, and Mind:

While investigations of this type cannot prove causality, the correlations in this study strongly indicate that, at least within the context of professional basketball, brief celebratory touch enhances individual and group performance and does so by building cooperation.

But what if you don't work on a team? What if you just work with numbers all day? Touching still helps. Believe it or not, massages improve math skills:

SUBSCRIBE

Via The Upward Spiral:

A hug, especially a long one, releases a neurotransmitter and hormone oxytocin, which reduces the reactivity of the amygdala.

Want to take it to the next level? Get a massage. Now you don't need me to tell you massage makes you feel better.

But did you know it helps your brain build good habits that can increase happiness down the line? That it reduces pain? That it reduces fatigue and improves sleep?

Via The Upward Spiral:

The results are fairly clear that massage boosts your serotonin by as much as 30 percent. Massage also decreases stress hormones and raises dopamine levels, which helps you create new good habits... Massage reduces pain because the oxytocin system activates painkilling endorphins. Massage also improves sleep and reduces fatigue by increasing serotonin and dopamine and decreasing the stress hormone cortisol.

group adults were asked to relax in the massage chair for 15 minutes, two times per week for five weeks... the massage group showed increased speed and accuracy on math computations while the control group did not change...

(To learn what Harvard research says will make you happier and more successful, click here.)

So a little bit of touching can boost success. But work isn't where most of your happiness comes from. What's a dead simple prescription for boosting happiness at home?

Hugs really do make you happy

Researchers at Penn State told a bunch of students they had to give or get five hugs a day for a month.

Of course, college students are terrible at following instructions so they only ended up averaging 49 hugs over the four weeks. But it didn't matter.

The hugging group (which partook in an average of 49 hugs over the course of the study) became much happier.

What's the magic ingredient in hugs? That simple squeeze increases your oxytocin levels. Oxytocin tells your amygdala (the fear, anxiety, and you really should get that massage as well — and get it from that special someone — because it does a lot more than just make you happier.

Massage strengthens relationships

Pay for some massage oil and you may not need to pay for a divorce attorney:

Research by Tiffany Field of the Touch Research Institute in Miami has found that a massage from a loved one can not only ease pain but also soothe depression and strengthen a relationship.

How do you get your partner to give you a massage? Tell them it will make you more attractive — because it can. That rub down can prevent wrinkles:

We show that body massage aimed at alleviating muscle tension in the neck and upper back alleviate frontalis muscle tension and improve forehead wrinkles.

Affectionate touches mean so much that merely noticing them can turn you into a Sherlock Holmes of relationships. Want to know how happy a couple is? Just pay attention to how often they kiss:

Overall, the researchers showed that the amount a couple kissed

Even better, want to know how happy you are with your relationship? Just ask yourself one question:

When you're stressed, how much better do you feel when you hold your partner's hand? Happier couples feel more relief:

Coan had 16 married women undergo an fMRI, during which he administered a small electric shock while each woman held her husband's hand, a stranger's hand, or no hand at all. Women reported less unpleasantness while holding their husband's hand and even slightly lower stress levels while holding the hand of a stranger. These results could not be chalked up to politeness either, as fMRI scans confirmed their feelings. Most strikingly, the effects of spousal handholding varied depending on marital quality, with happier couples feeling the most relief.

We've covered a lot. Let's round it all up and learn what the long term result of more touching, hugging, kissing and massage is.

Sum up

Here's what we learned about the power of touch:

Affection makes you successful: Kisses before work can add five years to your life and 30 percent to your paycheck. (Kisses at work lead to lawsuits.)

Hugs really do make you happy: Eight glasses of water a day doesn't make you healthy; it only makes you pee more. But eight hugs a day do make you happier. Smile more, pee less.

Massage strengthens relationships: And they help prevent wrinkles. Botox is expensive. Massages are free.

Okay, that's a lot of formal science about the most informal of subjects. But what happens if you listen to all these cold, clinical studies? You'll be considered a warmer person. That's nice, right?

No — it's awesome. When people perceive you as warm they also see you

Here's What Happens to Your Body When You Eat Human Meat

Spoiler: You might die.

BY SARAH RENSE SEP 7, 2016

In the isolated highlands of Papua New Guinea once lived a tribe of people called the Fore. The Fore were untouched by the outside world until the 1930s, and unstudied until the 1950s. When researchers finally made their way to the highlands, they discovered that an epidemic called the "laughing death" was killing women and young children. The "laughing death" was caused by eating human meat.

According to NPR, the Fore people ate their dead instead of burying them to protect them from worms and maggots. Better in the stomach of a loved one than in the stomach of a grub, so the Fore thought. Even better was the stomach of a female loved one, because her body could tame the dead's spirit. So the women scooped out the brains to cook and roasted the bodies, sneaking tidbits to their young children. And they were getting really sick. The disease, called kuru, caused the ill to lose control of their bodies and their emotions. Eventually, they died.

What baffled researchers, according to NPR, was that kuru wasn't a virus or a living bacteria. Instead, it was a strange process that researchers compared to Dr. Jekyll's transformation into Mr. Hyde—the thin line between good and evil crossed by a twisted protein, one that tricked other proteins in the brain to twist like it, damaging the brain's cerebellum.

The Fore people stopped eating their dead half a century ago, but the epidemic spanned years, with the last victim of kuru dying in 2009—the disease can lie dormant for years before attacking the brain. But similarly confusing diseases are still out there, like mad cow disease, which also originates in infected meat. Just not, you know, human meat.

Switzerland's central bank is expected to stick to its script of negative interest rates and a commitment to foreign currency interventions when it gives its latest monetary policy update next week, a Reuters poll found.

Despite improving economic developments and mounting criticism of its negative rates, the Swiss National Bank will keep the tools it has deployed since January 2015 when it scrapped its policy of limiting the franc at 1.20 to the euro.

All but two of the 31 economists polled by Reuters expect the SNB on Sept. 15 to keep its target range for the three month London Interbank Offered Rate at -1.25 percent to -0.25 percent, while all but one expected it to retain a negative rate of 0.75 percent on deposits it holds for commercial banks above a certain threshold.

The measure is designed to reduce demand for the Swiss franc, which has traded between 1.08 and 1.09 francs per euro for much of 2016.

quit the European Union, the highly valued currency remains a headache for Switzerland's export-orientated economy, economists said.

"If you look at the development of the Swiss economy and the franc over the last few months, at least since the last assessment, there is nothing that would imply a change," said Maxime Botteron, an economist at Credit Suisse.

"Growth is moderate, inflation is still negative, there's been no major movement in the exchange rate."

Botteron expects the SNB to maintain its current policy until at least the end of 2017.

The bank is also expected to maintain its policy of negative rates, despite it being criticized by pension funds, banks and savers, economists said.

The central bank will monitor the actions of the U.S. Federal Reserve and the European Central Bank as well as look for signs of uncertainty in the euro zone - which could lead to a rise in the value of the franc - before changing course, said Peter Rosenstreich, head of market strategy at Swissquote Bank.

"The SNB has to see what happens elsewhere before they react," Rosenstreich said.

Rising Delinquency Rates Put Outstanding Car Loans Over $1 Trillion

Daniel White @danielatlargo Sept. 7, 2016

More Americans are leasing cars, at higher rates

Americans are borrowing more than ever to pay for their vehicles, with many consumers behind on their payments.

Outstanding auto loans totaled $1.027 trillion between April 1 and June 30, according to a report by USA Today. The automotive division of one of the nation's largest lenders, Experian Automotive, says that this is the second consecutive quarter over $1 trillion.

Leases are up, accounting for 31.44% of all new car and truck buys in the second quarter, compared to 26.9% a year ago. Average monthly payments for these loans are also higher, at about $499, compared to $483 last year.

Overdue payments are on the rise as well, with 30- and 60-day loan delinquencies up 17% from a year ago among subprime and deep subprime borrowers—or those with a credit score of less than 600.

The auto market could see the full impact of an increased number of leases in a few years, when more of the leased vehicles are returned, causing the prices of those cars to drop at auction.

Mom proclaims 'being a modern parent is terrible' in funny post

BREAKING NEWS:

Officials: 2 students, teacher injured in shooting at South Carolina elementary school

A post by Bunmi Laditan, author of "The Honest Toddler," has gone viral after she vented about the modern parenting rules that her parents never had to follow.

BREAKING NEWS:*Officials: 2 students, teacher injured in shooting at South Carolina elementary school

Advertisement

"Do you know what I've been doing this morning? VITAMIN SHOPPING. For 45 minutes I've been comparing children's vitamins, reading online reviews, and, inflammatory blog posts backed by no science that I both fear and respect," wrote Laditan.

Vitamin shopping is one of the tasks that Laditan, who is known for her irreverent parenting style, considers daunting and expensive.

"Someone told me my kids need fish oils that cost $60. The closest thing I had to fish oils as a child was whatever the Gorton's fisherman caught, breaded, and fried," wrote Laditan.

As if that weren't enough, Laditan said she is tired of the pressure she feels from other parents to be perfect.

"Nothing about modern parenting is simple, and it irritates me," she wrote. "I've seen the way some parents look at me when I give my son a juice box at the park. It's juice, not Red Bull or margarita mix so calm down, Jackie yes I said your name."

Victorious! The David Ring Story 3

Jul 29, 2016

A few months ago, Christians all around the world gathered to celebrate the death and resurrection of our Lord. But did you ever stop t think WHY the Son of God chose to suffer so much? On this broadcast, evangelist David Ring suggests it's because the Lord saw you and me, in our helpless state, coming down a long and lonely road. Despite his lifelong struggle with cerebral palsy, David brings a message of hope we all need to hear.
