JANUARY 14, 2018 – In an exclusive interview, Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) tells “Meet the Press” moderator Chuck Todd “it’s unfair” to “draw conclusions from a remark that I think wasn’t constructive” and paint President Donald Trump as a racist “when I know, for a fact, that he cares very deeply about the people in Haiti because he helped finance a trip where we were able to get vision back for 200 people in Haiti.”

JANUARY 21, 2018 – In an exclusive interview, Sen. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) said he “can’t make that commitment at all” to fully support President Donald Trump on immigration. Marc Short, legislative affairs director for the White House, spoke to Todd about the president’s involvement in ending the government shutdown, responding to Todd asking why the president didn’t make a single public appearance yesterday: “The president has been involved. ... The president is engaged in finding out what are the impacts of this. He’s been on the phone in trying to find a resolution to it.”

FEBRUARY 18, 2018 – In an exclusive interview this morning on “Meet the Press,” Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.) told moderator Chuck Todd: “The problem is not owning an AR-15,” it’s “the person that owns it,” and added that the issue is the individual, “not the weapon that they’re holding.” Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) also exclusively joined the program, telling Todd that “nobody in our campaign was interviewed” by Special Counsel Mueller.

In the wake of the shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School, five of the school’s students, Jaelyn Corin, Emma Gonzalez, David Hogg, Cameron Kasky and Alex Wind also joined “Meet the Press” this morning, announcing “March for Our Lives,” a nationwide event and march in Washington, and telling Todd that the “attention is on us now.” Broward County Public Schools Superintendent Robert Runcie also joined the program, telling Todd: “we need a smarter system. We need a smarter infrastructure where various agencies, departments, school systems, they're working in a more integrated and collaborative fashion to ensure that we can share data, we can share information, to enhance our level of effectiveness.”

Democratic strategist Cornell Belcher, NBC News' Hallie Jackson and Carol Lee and CNBC's Rick Santelli joined this morning's roundtable for additional insight and analysis, where they also discussed the president's response to Special Counsel Mueller's latest indictments.

On what gun owners in Minnesota had to say about the reform, Klobuchar exclusively said: “We have a big hunting culture here ... what these hunters were telling me the last few days is that they are ready to do some background checks. They understand as law-abiding gun owners that we need to make changes.”

MARCH 4, 2018 – When asked by “Meet the Press” moderator Chuck Todd if President Donald Trump will reverse his controversial tariff announcement this week, Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross wouldn't commit: “Whatever his final decision is what will happen.” “The president has announced that this will happen this week. I have no reason to think otherwise,” Ross said. “The markets started recovering on Friday as it began to adjust to the realities that this is not the end of the world,” when asked if the decision will hold on Monday should the markets continue to be affected. The secretary also addressed the timing of the announcement: “It wasn't sudden,” he said, adding: “With a whole year of preparation, I don't know why anybody should've been so shocked.”

MARCH 11, 2018 – In an exclusive interview with “Meet the Press” moderator Chuck Todd, Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin says President Donald Trump meeting with North Korean leader Kim Jong-Un “isn't about elevating anybody” and “a major reason of why they're having this meeting is because the economic sanctions have had – have – a very big impact on both their economy, and their ability to get pieces of material and other things they need for their weapons programs.” Denuclearization of the Korean peninsula is “absolutely” still American policy, and “the logistics haven't been figured out yet” on the meeting location, shared Mnuchin.

Joining this morning's roundtable for insight and analysis were Matt Bai of Yahoo! News, Andrea Mitchell of NBC News, Peggy Noonan of The Wall Street Journal and Eugene Robinson of The Washington Post. Mitchell offered analysis of the week's North Korea developments, telling Todd: “They've had a victory by setting the terms and by having the meeting itself, as you were pointing out.

This is what all North Korean leaders have wanted. Three generations have wanted a meeting, legitimacy from an American president.”

MARCH 18, 2018 – In an exclusive interview on “Meet the Press with Chuck Todd,” Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) reacted to the firing of former FBI deputy director Andrew McCabe on Friday: “I don’t like the way it happened. He should’ve been allowed to finish through the weekend.” Rubio told Todd that the Senate Intelligence Committee should “potentially” call McCabe back to testify and addressed the damage the firing does to the FBI and the Justice Department: “We need to be very careful about taking these very important entities and smearing everybody in them with a broad stroke.”

Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio), who also joined the show in an exclusive interview, told Chuck Todd: “I hear so many Republican senators grumble about his [Trump’s] ethics, about his name-calling. ... At some point Republican enablers in the House and Senate are going to say publicly what they’ve been saying privately. And that’s when things change and we see a president back off this kind of name-calling, not telling the truth, sending out these tweets, all that.” New NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll numbers debuting on this morning’s broadcast show Democrats enjoy a 10-point advantage over Republicans in congressional preference for the 2018 midterm elections, even as President Donald Trump’s job approval rating has ticked up. His job is to manage the staff. And that’s what he has been doing.”

The Virginia senator continued: “I don’t think Facebook has been fully forthcoming. I called out Facebook back in December of ’16. In the spring of ’17, I questioned micro-targeting and the use of this really sketchy firm Cambridge Analytica.” He called on CEO Mark Zuckerberg “to come and testify.”

Todd traveled to Madison, Wis. this week to speak with “Reach Out Wisconsin,” a group comprised of voters across party lines, about gun reforms ahead of yesterday’s “March for Our Lives.”
