It's easy to write off people outside our own ideological bubbles, even when we might have many goals in common. But as the effects of the climate crisis become more apparent, we need leaders from all political and industrial perspectives to work together. In the United States, climate change is a polarizing issue in which it's too easy to assume that one side is working to reduce emissions and the other side is defending the status quo.

But that's only a caricature of reality. There are people from many ideological backgrounds trying to address the climate crisis. So how can common ground be found between environmentalists on the left and Republicans on the right? And what does an EV-driving member of the ConocoPhillips board have to say about reducing emissions?

The Uncertain Future of Nuclear Deterrence

Nuclear deterrence has been a cornerstone of U.S. defense since the end of World War II, seeking to protect the country's security and that of its allies by threatening unacceptable damage to any country that might attack with nuclear weapons or by other means. Since the end of the Cold War, the United States has been able to focus on reducing the role and number of nuclear weapons and strengthening nonproliferation. But now big changes are again afoot in the global context . . . will Russia's current modernization of its nuclear arsenal and China's buildup of strategic nuclear forces threaten the viability of the U.S. nuclear deterrent, including the extended deterrence the United States provides to its allies? Is arms control still possible?

What are China's and Russia's objectives in accelerating their nuclear weapons programs? How do their nuclear policies relate to their grand strategies and other military activities, such as the war in Ukraine for Russia, and the Chinese buildup of naval forces in the Pacific, and to their perceptions or misperceptions of United States activities? What are the implications for U.S. and world security? To maintain deterrence, will the United States be compelled to match the nuclear arsenals of both Russia and China? What do U.S. allies want and need from the United States and what can they contribute to deterrence?

In Conversation with DJ Patil

Government at all levels has limped into the digital age, widening the gap between the policy outcomes we intend and what we get.

Jennifer Pahlka served as President Barack Obama's former deputy chief technology officer. Join us for an in-depth talk as she offers a bold reexamination of how our government operates and the improvements that she says need to be made to end bureaucratic dysfunction.

It's not more money or more tech we need; Pahlka calls for "recoding" American government to reclaim it for the people it is supposed to serve.

Executive Director, John Burton Advocates for Youth

David Ambroz is a living testament to the power of hope, strength and perseverance in overcoming some of life's greatest challenges.

Ambroz's childhood was a harrowing tumult of poverty, homelessness and hunger as he, his siblings, and his mentally ill, abusive mother survived on the streets of New York. His subsequent experience in the foster system as a young gay man was similarly marked by neglect and abuse until he finally found stability.

In his recent memoir, A Place Called Home, Ambroz vividly describes his story of survival and ultimately life success. Today, Ambroz is a law school graduate, a leading advocate for child welfare, and a national voice for improved foster care and homelessness policies. He is a head of Community Engagement (Southern California & Western U.S. Region) at Amazon, and has been recognized by former President Obama as an American Champion of Change.

During the past few years, as our country has faced unprecedented challenges, Senator Klobuchar has been in the room where it happens—at the debate podium during one of the most critical presidential elections in U.S. history and in the Capitol on January 6, 2021, when insurrectionists stormed the building.

Additionally, during this time Sen. Klobuchar faced personal difficulties, including her husband's battle with COVID-19, her own cancer diagnosis, and her father's death.

In her new book The Joy of Politics, Sen. Klobuchar reflects on these past few years and what continues to drive her to live with improbable joy and resilience. She also reveals what it's really like working in Washington DC and her concerns about the state of American democracy.

Judge (Ret.); Author, Her Honor: My Life on the Bench . . . What Works, What's Broken, and How to Change It

In June 2022, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the constitutional right to an abortion, weakened gun restrictions and dramatically scaled back the E.P.A.'s authority to regulate carbon emissions. Michael Waldman, author of the new book The Supermajority: How the Supreme Court Divided America, explains why the court's 2021–2022 term was the most consequential in decades. The president of NYU's Brennan Center for Justice, Waldman analyzes key rulings and looks at what the Court's current trajectory could mean for democracy.

We'll also talk with Waldman about recent revelations that Justice Clarence Thomas accepted payments and luxury gifts from a GOP megadonor, and why he believes the court needs term limits and an ethics code.

Come hear one of the nation's leading Supreme Court experts explain how its actions could affect the daily lives of every American—and generations to come.

American Democracy at the Crossroads

Thomas Byrne Edsall

Columnist, The New York Times; Author, The Point of No Return: American Democracy at the Crossroads

In Conversation with Ray Suarez

Host, KQED's "On Shifting Ground"

As Donald Trump seeks the presidency again, one of the country's most insightful political observers wonders whether American politics has already passed the point of no return in terms of its divided politics and culture and decayed social order.

New York Times columnist Thomas Byrne Edsall, author of the new book The Point of No Return: American Democracy at the Crossroads, fears the country might be headed over a cliff and argues that the 2016 election of Donald Trump was the most serious threat to the American political system since the Civil War.

As the country prepares for another election with Trump, Edsall documents how the Trump years of 2016–2020 negatively impacted the country, in his opinion. He explains the demographic shifts that helped make Trump's election possible, and describes the racial and ethnic conflict, culture wars, rural/urban divide, diverging economies of red and blue states, and the transformation of both the Republican and Democratic parties that have left our politics in a state of permanent hostility.

As the country prepares for the 2024 election, can the country step back from the brink? Edsall isn't so sure. Please join us as the prominent columnist explains why and what might be ahead for the United States.

Building a Better Supply Chain

The race for raw materials is on. Lithium mines around the world are opening or expanding, while children as young as six in the Congo carry sacks of cobalt-laced rocks on their backs for less than $2 a day.

Recycling presents promising opportunities, yet before millions of batteries can be recycled, they have to be made in the first place. And while companies like JB Straubel's Redwood Materials are building capacity for recycling, for now that means a lot more mining.

How do we build a battery supply chain that meets demand and reduces harm?

Member, Commonwealth Club Board of Governors—Co-host

"Told with candor and grace, this is a joyous reminder to be kind to yourself."
—Actor and author Kai Penn on I Have Something to Tell You

Today, Chasten Buttigieg is readily known by his unusual last name as the husband of former presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg. But as a child, growing up in a rural, conservative Michigan town, he knew he was unusual for another reason: He was gay.

He kept that part of himself hidden for a long, painful time, but with the support of his loved ones, he eventually came out and learned the rewards of being true to himself. Finding acceptance and self-love can seem like a tremendous challenge, but it's never impossible. With honesty, courage and warmth, Chasten uses the young adult adaptation of his memoir to relay his experience about growing up in America and embracing his identity, while inspiring young people across the country to do the same.

Join us live and in-person in San Francisco as Chasten Buttigieg discusses his life and the issues raised in his book I Have Something to Tell You—For Young Adults.

Chasten Gleeman Buttigieg grew up in Traverse City, Michigan. He is a teacher and advocate, and lives with his husband Pete, their two children, and their two rescue dogs. This is his second book.
