But the largest land animals live a life that is completely foreign to us when left to their own in the wild--one complete with battles and births, kidnappings and camaraderie. More than fifteen years ago, Martyn Colbeck began to document in film and photos the lives of African elephants. For the better part of two decades, he has grown particularly close to the elephant matriarch, Echo, and her close-knit family, who have never failed to astonish, amuse, and inspire him.

Her body of well-suited armor and specialized adaptations for deep-ocean dwelling will help the sea turtle evade many of the ocean's menaces. But this is just one set of challenges to overcome. Here is another: she must find her way across the Pacific, from Mexico to a small stretch of beach in Japan, a precise location that she has been to just once before, as a two-inch hatchling, decades ago.

Forget everything you thought you knew about the 2008 presidential campaign. We'll tell you why tonight on "Washington Week." Sen. Hillary Clinton said, "I'm proud that I have such strong financial support from across the country." Mitt Romney (R-MA) [Former Governor] said, "It's time to have somebody go to Washington who knows how to change things for the better." Candidates raking in big bucks redefine the presidential campaign, the Democrats outraise the Republicans, Romney outraises McCain, and Barack Obama surprises just about everybody. While even with Congress out of town, the war of words over Iraq continues. Pres. George W. Bush said, "Members of Congress say they support the troops. Now they need to show that support in deed as well as in words." Sen. Harry Reid (D-NV) said, "He is the president of the United States, not king of the United States." What's really going on? And the Supreme Court weighs in on global warming: more bad news for President Bush?

In 1918, at the tail end of the First World War, a flu pandemic ripped through the world with such speed and virulence that by the end of the following year an estimated 40 million people would be dead-outstripping by four-fold the number of victims claimed by the war. Where did this particular flu strain come from, and what made it so deadly? "Killer Flu" will show how 85 years later, virologists and epidemiologists the world over are still hunting down the answers to those two critical questions. Their quest has been imbued with a sense of urgency; modern health experts are bracing themselves for a return of the 1918 flu strain, with many suggesting a similar pandemic will occur within the next decade. The show features the work of American pathologist Jeffrey Taubenberger, who found lung tissue from a 1918 flu victim that contained fragments of the undamaged 1918 virus. For the past six years, Taubenberger has been working to map the virus's genetic code one gene at a time in an effort to learn the secret of its killing prowess. He has even introduced some of the old virus's genes into present-day live virus and injected it into lung tissue to better study the way it attacks its victims. His hope is to apply his research on the 1918 virus to the emergence of new influenza strains.

The substance of politics and the politics of substance on Darfur, immigration, Iran, global warming, healthcare, and the science of getting elected, tonight on "Washington Week." President George W. Bush said, "I made clear that the time for promises was over and that President Bashir had to do something to end the suffering." By the end of next year, America and other nations will set a long-term global goal for reducing greenhouse gases. The Bush administration sets the terms for debates that could define his legacy at home and abroad. Secretary Of State Condoleezza Rice said, "We are prepared to change 27 years of American policy and sit with Iran to talk about whatever Iran would like to talk about." What do this week's pronouncements tell us about where the nation is heading? While in the 2008 presidential campaign, the field expands. Senator Fred Thompson said, "Do you ever wonder why when our problems seem to be getting larger that so many of our politicians seem to be getting smaller?" Why not an actor? Senator Thompson said, "Everybody says that." And the Democrats roll out their healthcare plans: what they have in mind and why they're talking about it now. This special telecast, hosted by Cuba Gooding, Jr., is a behind-the-scenes look at an extraordinary effort by the producers of SESAME STREET to help the approximately 700,000 children under the age of five who are waiting for a deployed mother or father to come home. What the producers discovered as they examined the effects of deployment on young American military families were stories of courage, hope and pride. This touching program is full of valuable information for parents in the military and those who care about them.

Political chaos on Iraq, both here and there. Alberto Gonzales: the e-mail trail. And a personal word about the Don Imus debacle, tonight on "Washington Week." The Iraqi Parliament under siege. The U.S. Military under stress. Secretary of defense Robert Gates said, "I think what this recognizes, though, is that our forces are stretched. There's no question about that." Senator Jim Webb (D-VA) said, "I think there are limits to human endurance, and there are limits to what families can put up with." The White House in search of a solution. Can the war in Iraq be saved? Senator John McCain is taking his presidential ambitions on the answer. Senator John McCain (R-AZ) said, "For my part - for my part - I would rather lose a campaign than a war." And Attorney General Alberto Gonzales stakes his career on the answers he gives an angry Congress about missing White House e-mails. Senator Patrick Leahy (D-

VT) said, "They can't say they've been lost. That's like saying "the dog ate my homework." Dana Perino [Dep White House Press Secretary] said, "I will admit it, you know, there was - we screwed up and we're trying to fix it." Plus radio host Don Imus is fired. What that says about trash talk, journalists, and politics. Covering the week: Linda Robinson of U.S. News and World Report, David Sanger of the New York Times, Dan Balz of the Washington Post, and Pete Williams of NBC News.

BILL MOYERS: When people are having a good time, you don't want to be the skunk in the garden. And people were having such a good time at that big White House welcome for Queen Elizabeth II. The NEW YORK TIMES says Her Majesty was "making Americans go weak in the knees." Sometimes we colonials seem so dazzled by British royalty that I wonder if General Washington did defeat Cornwallis at Yorktown. But a less playful thought also occurred. Watching the first and royal families all gussied up I couldn't help but think of Prince Harry, the Queen's grandson, who is headed for Iraq with a cavalry regiment, even though he's a conspicuous target for assassination or kidnapping. There's angst that other members of his regiment will be put at graver risk because of his celebrity. So guess what his comrades -- his fellow soldiers -- are doing? Rather than petition the Queen to keep the young man home, they have gotten shirts printed up with the words across them: "I'm Harry." In other words, the commoners and the Prince are in this together: one for all and all for one. What a notion -- that war should be the great equalizer, that no one's son or daughter is privileged from duty or danger. I wonder how the last four years might have been different if only our president had asked sacrifice from everyone. Instead, mostly folks from the working class and professional soldiers are doing the dying, while the rich spend their tax cuts. War on the cheap, except for those fighting it. Watching all the wrangling in Washington this week over timetables and exit strategies and benchmarks, I wondered if it all wouldn't come quickly to a halt if the next time they pow-wow and palaver, the president and Congress were asked to wear shirts with the words written across them, "I'm Harry."

9/11 has indelibly altered America in ways that people are now starting to earnestly question: not only perpetual orange alerts, barricades and body frisks at the airport, but greater government scrutiny of people's records and electronic surveillance of their communications. The watershed, officials tell FRONTLINE, was the government's shift after 9/11 to a strategy of pre-emption at home -- not just prosecuting terrorists for breaking the law, but trying to find and stop them before they strike.
