Russia supposedly has blocked half a dozen attempts by the UN to investigate the possible use of chemical weapons in Syria. A senior Russian diplomat says the chemical watchdog group is not allowed to get to the site of the alleged attack in Syria without a UN permit. Russia has military forces in several places in Syria. Some Syrians are saying American and French airstrikes are providing hope after living for years under Assad's regime in a seven-year Civil War. The Pentagon says the weekend's strikes dealt a serious blow to the Syrian chemical weapons program. Speaking of chemical weapons, independent investigators have been kept from visiting the scene of the alleged gas attack near the Syrian capital. Both the U.S. and France say they have evidence of poison was used in the area to take the lives of dozens of people. Today independent investigators were not allowed access to the site of a suspected chemical attack in Syria. Russian and Syrian soldiers claimed 'security issues' are in play. And after that missile attack last week by American and allied countries – intended to stop Syria's chemical program, Russia is now responding... with a build-up. Two warships loaded with tanks and other military gear are headed for Syria. U.N. Ambassador Nikki Haley said if the Syrian government uses chemical weapons again, America is locked and loaded ready to respond.

Alberto is expected to move northward into the Tennessee Valley on Tuesday. Governors of Florida, Mississippi and Alabama have all ordered states of emergency for part or all of those states freeing up resources and allowing for activation of the National Guard if needed. Coastal and inland flooding could be a big deal in the next few days as well so a good idea to have a family emergency plan, especially if you live in low-lying or other areas prone to flooding. Heavy rain and storm surges make that likely in spots. Dangerous surf and rip currents continue along the and Gulf Coast – not good beach or boating weather for the next few days. 6:00am: heading north and creating lots of rain across Florida and and the rest of the Gulf Coast as it gets closer. Currently, about 165 miles southwest of Tampa - a tropical storm warning is in effect for Florida and a tropical storm watch continues for Alabama and Mississippi as Alberto moves more northwest as it edges up into the gulf at about 15 mph. Maximum sustained winds picking up a bit at 45 mph with higher gusts and expected to gradually get stronger leading up to the storm's landfall - expected sometime late tonight or tomorrow. Alberto is expected to lose some steam at that point as it moves northward into the Tennessee Valley sometime Tuesday. Florida, Mississippi and Alabama are all under a state of emergency for part or all of those states to free up resources and allow for activation of the National Guard if needed. Lots of rain expected with coastal and inland flooding possible over the next few days in the warning area. Time to review that family emergency plan, especially if you live in low-lying or other areas prone to flooding. The rain along with storm surges make that likely in spots. Dangerous surf and rip currents continue as well along the Gulf Coast – not great beach or boating weather for the next few days. 9:00am: It's about 130 miles west-southwest of Tampa where a tropical storm warning is issued moving at about 14 miles per hour. Weather	Local News Break	5/29/18	12:00am	30sec	Alberto made landfall on Monday and has now been downgraded to a depression. Even so, heavy rainfall will continue over the southeast as what's left of Alberto lifts into the Tennessee Valley today, and toward the Midwest Wednesday and Thursday. Alberto is centered in South-Central Alabama. The storm is expected to further diminish and become a remnant low sometime today. All coastal watches and warnings have been lifted, but there's still the possibility of some dangerous swells along the Gulf Coast, producing rip-current conditions. Flood watches and warnings are in effect for much of us through the day. 2-6 inches of rain is in the forecast. Isolated tornadoes and severe storms are also expected. Again, Alberto moves north into the Ohio Valley Wednesday and the Great Lakes on Thursday, but for today, expect some heavy rain and storms in our area. And remember, don't drive into high water. Turn around, don't drown.

The Supreme Court has ruled that states can force online retailers like eBay and Amazon to start collecting tax from us. It's a win for states but also for large retailers who've said they had a disadvantage by the physical presence rule. States are expected to make millions of dollars and we will be paying more when buying online.

There have been so many packages of shirts, pants, underwear and notes of encouragement that the center had to rent additional storage space. The House this week, is expected to vote on an immigration bill, at this point, not likely to pass. A charity in Texas says they took in dozens of parents immigrating to the US from Mexico. The parents were held at a detention center. This is the first large release by the government since the president's executive order was signed last Wednesday. The Trump Administration announced its plan for the more than 2000 families separated due to the 'zero tolerance' immigration policy—parents can have reunited with their children if they agree to be deported together. The parents have the option of waiting for asylum but may not see their children for months or years. President Trump says due process for illegal border crossings is too time consuming, suggesting quick deportation instead of families being able to seek asylum in front of an immigration judge.

Included is an indefinite ban on Syrian refugees, with priority given to religious minorities facing persecution. It also affects two non-Muslim countries; North Korea and some Venezuelan officials. The decision rejects a challenge that some say discriminate against Muslims or goes beyond the president's authority. The ruling was 5-4.

A federal judge has order immigration officials reunite separated families within 30 days. Kids younger than 5, within the next 14 days. Some fear it could take months to get thousands of kids back together with their parents. Some fear it could take months to get all families back together. Many of the families are fleeing from drug and violence-wracked countries like Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador. The house voted against a compromise immigration bill today. It would have addressed families being separated at the Mexico border and a border wall. A more focused bill will likely be voted on next month.
