There are many elements to this project, which is named for the telephone area code 760 that's assigned to Encinitas, California and surrounding area. One example of how the church members have been blessing the community, on Fridays – before weekends began - church volunteers would drop off backpacks filled with food so the schools could distribute to children who were from "food insecure homes." Pastor Troy Martin shares that about 40 families were directly helped each weekend. And that was before the COVID-19 pandemic hit. "But once the pandemic hit, the numbers jumped to 220-plus families. Our church really rallied around it. People brought in donations. People helped pack, helped organize. People gave funds toward the project just to be a blessing and help people in their time of need." Pastor Troy wants the church to "live on mission to the community." He says it's not like, "Oh, we hope the community comes into our building as part of one of our services', but, no, we want to go and love the community and bless the community and really be Jesus to the community."

The graduates celebrated online, due to COVID-19 pandemic restrictions. Senior Class President Abigail Paquin presented her encouraging video speech and then sat down to sing an original song that she wrote for the special and unusual occasion. The speech and song took focus, hard work, and prayer. "I was definitely disappointed, but I was not surprised and it was kind of hard to think that after these past few years of going to my school's graduations and seeing my senior friends every year graduating – knowing that I wouldn't have that – it was definitely really sad." Abigail adds, "I was praying a lot and I was asking the Lord 'why, why is this happening?'" The Lord gave her a peace about the situation and Abigail then knew "I had to encourage my classmates."

Another show touched on wild weather. “We are in the Houston area, so we do have the threat of hurricanes [in 2017, Hurricane Harvey brought catastrophic flooding and damage to Houston]. And we’ve done another one about manners – honestly, we’re just talking to kids about, you know, right now is a good time to hone in on their manners. And when you use good manners, you’re not just showing respect, you’re also showing love and respect for God.”

They’re a cute diversion from the routine of a normal school day but it’s also serving a vital purpose. The pups are being trained at Wimberley High to become diabetic alert dogs. Tiffany Black is the agriculture science teacher. Black says, “Three of my students are partnered with three puppies. So, it’s their responsibility to care for the puppies. They get to take them home. They’re responsible for that basic training and socialization. And then they bring those puppies to school and we work with them in our classrooms, continuing those basic techniques.” Once fully trained, the dogs will help alert their owners in case their blood sugar drops. Truly a life-saving skill. But Tiffany says the animals need to learn how to conduct themselves no matter where they are to get them ready for their upcoming jobs.

As we share this story, you may sense that he has wisdom beyond-his-years when it comes to troublesome issues that often haunt pastors, even veteran pastors. But this is not a story of discouragement - stay with us. Cody explains he "grew up with a lot of anxiety issues and depression as a teenager," which persisted during his time in seminary. He eventually realized how much this had impacted him. "Since it had affected me so personally, I've been pretty passionate about shedding light on how deep that issue runs in the church." He recently wrote a first-person article published online by Baptist Press that spoke of the mental health risks that can tag even a servant of God. Sadly, there have been as a number of cases where pastors have apparently taken their own lives, including one pastor who had even led a mental health advocacy group. Join our conversation in this podcast as Cody lays out the dark threats often circling pastors and suggests practical ways to encourage church leaders.

But that didn't stop people from encouraging her! 250 cars with family, friends and students surprised her with a huge parade outside of her home in Hammond, Louisiana. Jennifer's daughter Emily came from college to take care of her and said they'd sing Christian songs together. "We would play K-LOVE and she would sing to me and dance while we waited for the spinal taps to be done." Emily, Jennifer's daughter, has helped her post weekly Facebook live updates on their "Faith over Fear" page and Jennifer has continued to have story time online for her kindergarten students. She wants to let her "babies" know that she's doing great. Jennifer's daughter Emily came from college to take care of her and said they'd sing Christian songs together. He made arrangements with a gas station, then stood outside with his “Free Gas for Nurses” sign. The $900 he spent blessed a lot of very surprised medical workers. The money was a bit of a sacrifice. It had been set aside for Allen’s mother’s 97 th birthday and for a tool he wanted for his knife-sharpening business. But since his mother was at a senior home, they couldn’t have a party – and the tool, well it could wait. This was more important to Allen and his wife, who works in the insurance medical field.

Crowds were a risk of spreading the aggressive virus. Some churches were familiar with livestreaming services, but many had not done that before. Pastors realized the internet was about the only way to share sermons and live worship with the millions of families now staying at home for safety. But how? For 25,000 churches there was a quick and reliable solution – the Church Online Platform software developed by Life.Church, whose home church is based in Oklahoma, with campuses in 11 states. Incredibly, thankfully, Life.Church believes in offering whatever help they can free-of-charge to other churches. So, for 25,000 churches the ability to bring their services online in high quality was just a matter of downloading the platform and learning. No charge. No strings attached.

But, “when the pandemic hit, we just put that into overdrive,” explains Senior Pastor Miles McPherson. “I think one of the things that hopefully a lot of people have learned is...one of the ways to get your mind off yourself is to think about other people. You can sit at home and go crazy thinking about the ‘what if’ scenarios about your money, ‘what if’ scenarios about your future,” but McPherson recommends connecting to others can be “somewhat therapeutic.” Rock Church volunteers repaired and delivered 263,000 N95 masks to San Diego's Office of Emergency Services. These respirators were placed into the County of San Diego's Medical Operations Center's warehouse for use by Health Care Workers. 4,284 church volunteers served in three-hour time shifts for a total of 12,852 hours. With the help of restaurants and the community, the church provided thousands of meals to 13 hospitals in San Diego County to encourage “frontline hospital heroes.”

Mixed up idea, it is. Unless you’re Cedarville University alumna Heidi Bruder trying to spice up language arts for her suddenly online fifth through seventh graders at Calvary Christian Academy in West Branch, Michigan. Then it’s an idea that would make a Jedi master proud. Bruder usually teaches a very interactive class, so this March when students switched to online learning, she was at a loss for what to do. “Switching to online learning was heartbreaking for me,” explained Bruder. “It was hard for me to want to make the videos and teach the lessons because everything I loved about teaching, I felt was being stripped away. But I was convicted by what I tell my kids all the time: Whatever you do, do it for the Lord.”

With Virus Response It’s quite an honor when the county health department calls on a university for help, knowing by previous interaction that the Christian school’s nursing program is first-class. That’s what happened for the Betty M. Dean School of Nursing at Simpson University based in Redding, California. When the COVID-19 pandemic started taking hold, the Shasta County Health and Human Services Agency requested volunteers from Simpson’s program. There was a need for medically aware people, with a human touch, to respond to numerous phone calls from area residents who were concerned about the pandemic. “The peace and the comfort that the students can bring has a really deep effect” and Becky reminds us “that’s what nurses do, and which is also the role of the body of Christ in so many ways.”

Pastor Jud Wilhite shares that prior to the pandemic, the church was "blown away to realize we were the largest food pantry in our state - and when the pandemic hit, we served more food in the first two weeks than we did last year!" Wilhite credits God for everything Hope for the City has been able to do. "We started pop-up food distribution sites across elementary school parking lots – anybody that would take us." For people who may be discouraged over a job loss or just the pandemic restrictions causing depression, we asked if counseling help is available? "Absolutely! We have started a ministry that has really been powerful for us and I think made a huge difference in the lives of people. It's called 24 Hour Church." A person who needs an uplift, prayer or guidance can call or text 1-888-805-2778 day or night to speak with a volunteer. Pastor Wilhite says that number is getting calls from "people all over the world, now."

As a pastor and community leader, Darron LaMonte Edwards of United Believers Community Church is stepping up to help. It's a concept he developed called "Getting to the Heart of the Matter"- ten steps intended to prevent circumstances for crime from happening in the first place. Pastor Edwards believes God wants him to "step into the gap to slow down, to push back darkness so that light can shine." Implementation of the program has taken some time "to jump all the political hurdles" in the city, but now it has been "embraced by the chief of police and by KC PD and we're beginning to see great strides happen." 32 faith communities are already onboard with Getting to the Heart of the Matter – and Pastor Edwards says that took place in just two weeks.

While other businesses around them seemed to be struggling during the pandemic, their bakery was 'booming!' Ryan and Kaitlin Stafford own the Bear Fruit bakery. And being blessed, they decided to give part of their earnings to other businesses, to help them stay afloat. "God's been in it the whole way and He knew that we we're gonna be able to do some good with it," says Ryan. He says the bakery is not all about making money, but rather about investing in God and in people. He admits the business has definitely been a "blessing from God and His favor has been in it the whole way."

"We come together to try to do good things for our rivers, to do good things for paddlers, to put training in place for new people coming into the sport and sometimes we're lobbying on behalf of the rivers and on behalf of the paddlers," Andrea said. Recently, a group of paddlers from across Tennessee came together to Ervin to become certified as Rescue Instructors. They learned how to prevent paddling deaths (Data from the U.S. Coast Guard's Office of Boating Safety shows that between 2006 and 2018, paddlecraft fatalities have increased by 30 percent). Regarding an increase in fatalities, Andrea says it "doesn't seem to be a change in behavior, but an increase in the popularity of the sport. We're trying to what we can to make things safer."

Most pastors had never preached before an empty church – and many had to learn to share their message by way of a video camera. Brian Kluth, national spokesman for Bless Your Pastor, working alongside the National Association of Evangelicals, shares that “most of them (pastors), they have had to learn to develop material online, whether that's church services, worship music, bible studies, even pastoral care – calling people, counseling – all this had to be done online, so it's just taken a huge toll on pastors. Many of them are very tired and many of them have done their very best – they and their staff and volunteers – to serve the congregation. So, this has been a difficult year.”

Dr. Kevin Corsini, the president of San Diego Christian College joins us to share tips that can make online studies more practical, while at the same time keeping home life balanced. Normally, "We have a natural boundary in place between work and family, and it's called the office, or it's called the school, where you go to a separate physical location." But Dr. Corsini emphasizes, "And that's gone...the refuge that we call home is also a classroom, is also the office and it's beginning to blur the lines" of what needs to be a home space or a work or school environment. "Not only that, but it's impacting the roles in the family. You know, one minute you have to be a father. The next minute you have to be a teacher. The next minute, you're putting on your professional hat as well – and throughout the day, that can be very challenging." There is also the factor of a student feeling marginalized. Many online courses are pre-recorded videos that can create a gap between the student and teacher/professor, and input and association with fellow classmates.

When a 'how to make homemade biscuits' video unexpectedly went viral, it was the start of a new chapter in her life, at age 73. Months later, Brenda has well over a million people following her on Facebook, where she offers a cooking show featuring recipes that often involve scrumptious Southern cooking. After all, Brenda and her family are in Andalusia, Alabama, a town of 8,700 just above the Florida Panhandle. Brenda's soft-spoken cooking coaching offers step-by-step instructions to create fascinating dishes like: Banana Split Without a Banana, Old Time Chocolate Gravy, Rolled Chicken, and Cracklin' Cornbread. Instead of fancy cookware, you see the skillets and utensils average people might have in their kitchen. And as Brenda stands over the stove keeping an eye on her food project, she will share things on her mind – maybe about her family or someone she met, and she often shares about her faith in Jesus. No sermons, just talking from her heart.
