Natural Disaster	News	10/3/17	3:00am, 4:00am, 11:40am, 1:40pm, 3:40pm, 4:15pm	60sec	President Trump is in Puerto Rico today, assessing the damage following Hurricane Maria. He mentioned the disaster has "thrown our budget a little out of whack," but that it's worth it. The president also stopped by Calvary Chapel Puerto Rico, handing out food, paper towels and batteries. The president praised FEMA, saying he'd never seen someone working so hard in his life. The FCC is working to make funds available to expedite repairs for communications in Puerto Rico. 90 percent of cell phone sites on the island are still out of service. The navy hospital ship comfort also arrived today. It docked in San Juan after 4 days at sea. Medical teams will provide necessary care to those in need. Puerto Rico residents are thanking President Trump for his visit there today. Many said they were proud of him for showing up. Two weeks after hurricane Maria... most of the island is still without power and there's little cell service.

It's got winds clocked at about eighty-five miles per hour and is headed north. 7:55pm: Positioned about 35 miles south of Biloxi right now, Nate reportedly made its first landfall on the Louisiana coast about ten miles southwest of the Mouth of the Mississippi. Maximum sustained winds remain about eighty-five miles per hour as it heads northward. A hurricane warning remains in effect for Grand Isle all the way to the Alabama-Florida line. 9:30pm: The movement of the storm has slowed a bit to about 20 mph making its way through western and central Mississippi. Jackson County centered around Pascagoula is taking the heaviest hit with heavy rain and sustained winds of 85 mph with life threatening storm surge and flooding expected along the gulf coast there. A four and a half foot water rise in the last hour there. Many roads underwater including U.S. 90 along the coast through Gulfport Tornado watches in effect as well across much of the area. 3500 reportedly without power now from multiple utility companies. Coastal Alabama declared an 8:00 curfew tonight and closed all bridges, so that took most everyone off the roads there which is good. Officials all through this storm region are advising all to stay off the roads and shelter in place. 11:15pm: Pensacola is also dealing with the storm surge now – just the next phase in what has turned out to be the wettest year on record for them. They're approaching 80 inches of rainfall for the year now. State Hwy 399 near there is closed by authorities because it's underwater. Nearly 26,000 people reportedly without power across the south as a result of this storm. New Orleans Hurricane warning has been lowered to a Tropical Storm Warning. Though hurricane warnings for Grand Isle all the way to the Alabama-Florida line are still in effect at the moment. New Orleans mayor Mitch Landrieu lifted the city's curfew after the National Weather Service lifted the hurricane warning for the city. Landrieu's office recommended that people continue to shelter in place with high wind gusts still expected in the city. Storm surge warnings have been put in place for some Louisiana and Florida coast cities. Storm surge warnings are also in effect for Grand Isle to the Okaloosa-Walton County line. Specifically there could be an

Experts say it'll take the control of the internet away from the public and put it in the hands of the service providers. That means consumers will pay more. 10:00am: Net Neutrality regulations ended today with a vote from the FCC. The rules were passed a couple years ago to make sure cable and phone companies don't manipulate internet traffic. This may mean that cable and phone companies can control what you see online. Under the new proposal, the FCC would end rules barring internet providers from blocking or slowing down access to online content. It would also allow providers to prioritize their own content. Comcast is reassuring its customers, saying we'll continue to enjoy an open internet now and in the future. Some critics say it'll make it harder for the next wave of online services to compete if they have to pay to be high-profile on a search engine. Several states are planning lawsuits against the FCC.
