To supplement and enhance the educational value of the network's "Teen NBC" programs, NBC has launched a dedicated website entitled "At The Max." The design of this site not only brings teens to the website for entertainment, but provides a valuable means of amplifying the educational content of the shows by bringing teens to a new level of exploration for the subjects presented in the show.

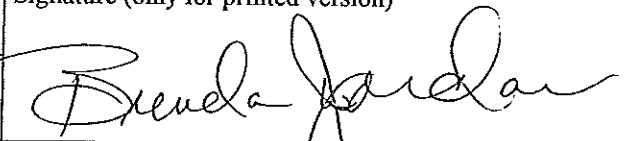

Highlights of the new website include the feature "How Do You Rate," which allows viewers to explore in depth many of the difficult issues TNBC characters face each week, including substance abuse, sexual harassment, peer pressure, competition, violence, conflict resolution and many critical family issues. Teens take quizzes to see how they would handle these situations and through video clips, compare their responses to each show's resolution. "How Do You Rate" will also collect data live on the web and allow teens to see how their answers compare with other teens on the site. In addition, topic bulletin boards allow teens to speak their mind on each issue.

Other features of the website include "The Grand Prize," a monthly academic contest on a variety of subjects. Recent competitions asked teens to compose a top ten list of things they plan to do to improve society in 1998 and to comment on the United Nation's reaction to the conflict with Sadam Hussein in Iraq. Winners will earn a $1,000 bond toward their education expenses. Also, "The Mad Money Room" section, launched in conjunction with the JumpStart Foundation, educates teens about money management issues and the "Take A Stand" section encourages teens to get involved in community service.
