The majority of Americans feel guilty when tossing an item in the trash that could be recycled, but confusion about what types of plastic can be recycled has led to a lack of trust that plastic actually gets recycled. A recent survey revealed that the confusion is widespread, as more than 60% of consumers believe that flexible plastics such as plastic grocery bags and bubble wrap, some of the most common contaminants in today’s recycling stream, are recyclable in their curbside bin. According to the U.S EPA, only 30% of plastic bottles and jugs get recycled. That low figure is not because they can’t be recycled, but because consumers aren’t putting them in their recycling bins. On America Recycles Day and every day, consumers can be better recyclers and do their part for the environment by recycling plastic bottles and jugs – generally anything with a handle or neck – whenever possible.

Direct Relief works in the U.S. and internationally to expand access to medicine and healthcare by equipping doctors and nurses with lifesaving medical resources. Overall giving increased again in 2021, but this year, inflation is weighing on people’s bank balances, which could reverse that trend just as more donations are needed to meet a spike in demand for nonprofit services. Giving Tuesday and the end-of-year giving season marks a critical time when those still in a position to donate can set up their hard-earned dollars to make the biggest impact despite inflation. Fortunately, there are easy ways to do that, like choosing an effective charity, taking advantage of gift matching opportunities and using a lower cost payment method.

Law enforcement officers are increasingly acting as first responders, often arriving at a scene before paramedics and EMS. The national EMS response time average is over 15 minutes, and every second counts in a medical emergency. In five minutes or less, a wounded victim can bleed to death. As the first ones at the scene of life-threatening medical emergencies, law enforcement often don't have funding for the necessary equipment or the medical training to save lives. When properly trained and equipped, a police officer can treat life-threatening injuries while waiting for EMS to arrive and take over. Cops Direct is a non-profit supplying critical life-saving equipment to police departments across the country, on-demand when they need it most.
