

the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are undernourished has increased from 600 million to 800 million.

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is the rapid population growth in the developing world. The number of people in the world is expected to reach 8 billion by the year 2025, with the majority of the increase occurring in the developing world.

Another reason for the increase in undernourishment is the decline in agricultural production in many developing countries. This is due to a number of factors, including the depletion of soil fertility, the lack of investment in agricultural infrastructure, and the impact of climate change.

Finally, the increase in undernourishment is also due to the unequal distribution of food and resources. In many developing countries, a small number of people own most of the land and the means of production, while the majority of the population are poor and do not have access to sufficient food and resources.

The consequences of undernourishment are severe. It leads to a number of health problems, including stunted growth, weakened immune systems, and increased susceptibility to disease. It also has a negative impact on economic development, as undernourished people are less productive and have a shorter life expectancy.

There are a number of ways to address the problem of undernourishment. One of the most important is to increase agricultural production in developing countries. This can be done by investing in agricultural infrastructure, such as irrigation systems and roads, and by providing farmers with access to credit and other services.

Another way to address the problem is to improve the distribution of food and resources. This can be done by implementing policies that support small-scale farmers and by ensuring that food and resources are available to all people, regardless of their income level.

Finally, it is important to address the underlying causes of undernourishment, such as poverty and inequality. This can be done by implementing policies that promote economic growth and social justice, and by ensuring that all people have access to education and other opportunities.

The problem of undernourishment is a complex one, and it will require a coordinated effort from governments, the private sector, and civil society to address it. However, if we do not act now, the number of people who are undernourished will continue to increase, and the consequences will be even more severe.

the 1990s, the number of people with a disability in the United States has increased by 25% (U.S. Census Bureau, 1997).

As a result of the increase in the number of people with disabilities, the need for accessible information has become more acute. The National Center for Accessible Information (NCAI) has estimated that the number of people with disabilities who need accessible information is 100 million (NCAI, 1997).

The purpose of this study was to determine the information needs of people with disabilities.

The study was conducted in two phases. The first phase was a literature review.

The second phase was a survey of people with disabilities.

The survey was conducted in two parts. The first part was a questionnaire.

The second part was a focus group discussion.

The questionnaire was distributed to 100 people with disabilities.

The focus group discussion was held with 10 people with disabilities.

The results of the survey are presented in this paper.

El consumo excesivo de sal común está asociado al mayor riesgo de sufrir hipertensión arterial.

Autoridades buscan reducir el consumo de sal.

Añadir sal a los platillos para darles "sabor" es un hábito culinario común entre la población mexicana; lo mismo se hace con muchas frutas frescas, las tortillas o con el tradicional "caballito" de tequila, que suelen condimentarse con unos granos de ese compuesto.

Sin embargo, como lo han revelado múltiples estudios, el consumo excesivo de sal común (cuyo componente principal es el cloruro de sodio, una molécula formada por 40% de sodio y 60% de cloro) está asociado con un mayor riesgo de sufrir hipertensión arterial.

Por ello la Secretaría de Salud capitalina impulsa una campaña que busca reducir el consumo de ese producto, ya que los mexicanos ingerimos en promedio 11 gramos del mismo al día, más del doble de la cantidad recomendada por la Organización Mundial de Salud (OMS) de 5 gramos. La campaña "Menos sal. más salud"

"Hay alimentos industriales como las botanas, salsas, entina o los refrescos de dietas que tienen un altísimo contenido de sodio, que también debe limitarse no sólo la sal que tenemos en la mesa", explica la nutrióloga Araceli Suverza Fernández de la Universidad Iberoamericana.

Riesgo oculto

La académica del Departamento de Salud de la UIA dice que cuando ha habido polémica sobre el consumo de sodio conlleva un incremento en la tensión arterial; pero que necesitamos forzar este mineral en nuestro sistema.

Entonces, añade Suverza que eliminar totalmente el consumo de sal, sino limitarlo a los niveles fijados por la OMS. En sus nuevas recomendaciones de 2013, la entidad aconseja que los adultos ingieran menos de 5 miligramos de sodio (por lo que equivale a 5 gramos de sal) al día. En forma completa la OMS recomienda ingerir

Hi-- (Downlove = East Bay Asian Local Development)

XLLC and KCBS are looking for Entry Level Account Execs. No need for sales experience but definitely a bonus. They're looking for someone with that "go get" attitude.

DOJ Takes Down Sacramento County

Attorney General Kamala D. Harris recently announced the arrest of four individuals, including suspected Sureños gang members and the seizure of an estimated $2 million in marijuana during a California Department of Justice raid of a marijuana growing operation in Sacramento County.

After a month-long investigation, Special Agents with the California Department of Justice seized more than 7,000 marijuana plants and 100 pounds of processed marijuana with an estimated the 1990s, the number of people with a disability in the United States has increased by 25% (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000).

As a result of the increase in the number of people with disabilities, the need for accessible information has become more acute. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) of 1990 has been a landmark piece of legislation that has provided a legal framework for the development of accessible information. The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities, and that the information be presented in a format that is accessible to them. This has led to the development of accessible information systems, which are designed to be accessible to people with disabilities.

One of the most important aspects of accessible information is the format in which the information is presented. Romantic Comeay

Sometimes you have to travel 30,000 miles just to appreciate the guy who lives down the hall — or so goes “Baggage Claim,” a movie about a Flight Attendant Barbie type who runs herself ragged chasing romantic prospects while her perfect suitor may as well be waving lighted wands from the runway the entire time.

“Girl, open your eyes!” you want to shout, not that it would improve the exasperating situation. That kind of talk-back is typical of playwright David E. Talbert’s popular urban theater shows, though this watered-down adaptation of his 2003 novel is too worried about attracting white audiences (which it won’t) to let its African-American attitude take off.

The project represents something of a gamble for Fox Searchlight, which doesn’t have nearly the track record that Lionsgate (home of Talbert successor Tyler Perry) has had with black viewers; nor has it made the effort to court crossover audiences to support this release.

Cynically speaking, the casting of light-skinned star Paula Patton (“Precious”) looks like a bid to broaden the pic’s appeal. But it could almost If a woman find a man to do others have As a “Claim” allow certain his with corny the ideal in world travel has develop guys fall in egories, rare night bag?” (“trunk” (old perfect man set of luggage parments. when you th him out ... with a hidden cranny.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (13.5% of the population).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century in the White Paper on Ageing Better (Department of Health 1999). This sets out a vision of a society in which older people are able to live well, and to contribute to society. The White Paper sets out a number of key objectives, including:

• to improve the health and well-being of older people, and to reduce the burden of illness and disability;
• to improve the quality of life of older people, and to reduce the burden of social isolation and loneliness;
• to improve the financial security of older people, and to reduce the burden of poverty.

The White Paper also sets out a number of key actions, including:

• to improve the health and well-being of older people, and to reduce the burden of illness and disability, by: increasing the number of GPs and other health professionals who are trained to care for older people; increasing the number of health professionals who are trained to care for older people with long-term conditions; and increasing the number of health professionals who are trained to care for older people with mental health problems.

• to improve the quality of life of older people, and to reduce the burden of social isolation and loneliness, by: increasing the number of community centres and other facilities that provide opportunities for older people to socialize; and increasing the number of community centres and other facilities that provide opportunities for older people to participate in activities.

• to improve the financial security of older people, and to reduce the burden of poverty, by: increasing the number of people who are eligible for the state pension; and increasing the number of people who are eligible for other social security benefits.

helps them become the architects of the platforms they use every day.”

In this way, THGP doesn't just empower its individual students, it works to correct the biases of our digital infrastructure, a digital infrastructure that has largely been coded by white and Asian men. “I never thought I would learn this kind of stuff. I never thought I could learn how computers work,” said Mohammed Abdulla, a sophomore at Oakland Tech and a Hidden Genius student. “We came into the program kind of disorganized and unfocused, just sloppy... I think learning how to code was also really learning how to think. My homework is easier, I know how to talk and be brave. The growth is enormous.”

Ayori Se, another collaborator on the Start Up Weekend event, believes that only people from under-served communities will innovate the technological solutions particular to life in those communities. “We ask questions like, ‘could an app have saved Trayvon Martin’s life?’” said Se.

Se is the founder of Pitch Mixer, a typical Entrepreneur Forum, in which participants are given the opportunity to hone their pitches and pick the brains of investors and peers, the twist being that Pitch Mixer is free.

“It takes courage to participate in a hackathon or a forum, and it takes even more courage to be the one Black person participating.” However, she explained, “Just the fact that a Black woman is hosting the mixer goes a long way in making other people of color feel like they belong.

Acta Non Verbanches Oakland

Partnership Program

By Richard Kevin Cartwright

Walking through the wide expanse of nurtured and cultivated vegetable beds — a seemingly endless array of broccoli, an almond tree, lemons hanging from struggling branches, among others — one cannot help but wonder if Acta Non Verba Farm is a hidden away oasis in the midst of decades-old disrepair and intransigence.

Kelly Carlisle doesn't call herself a miracle worker, a do-gooder or even an agent of change. She calls herself a farmer.

"The fact that I call myself a farmer is highly offensive to many people I've talked to," Carlisle said. "They look at me as if I'm from another planet sometimes. But, I am a farmer. Bottom line."

Not only is she a farmer, but clearly a very good one.

The beds of greens, broccoli, cabbage, and fava bean bouquets suggest someone in tune with the process of seed to soil, cultivation and growth. Acta Non Verba Farm is a quarter acre plot located at
