Murrieta Immigrants Transfer

Description of how this issue was covered

Murrieta will receive 140 immigrants Tuesday afternoon and may receive the same amount every 72 hours for several weeks. The Murrieta Border Patrol station is bracing for an influx of hundreds of immigrants- mostly young children from Honduras El Salvador and Guatemala- a few are coming with a parent. Murrieta's mayor is one of many who object to this. Murrieta expects federal government to enforce laws including the deportation of illegal immigrants caught crossing the border, not to push them into local communities. More than 50,000 children said to be fleeing Central America because of gang violence and poverty have illegally crossed the border into Texas since October. Texas border patrol is unable to process so many kids, so some are being flown to San Diego on Tuesday and then bussed to Border Patrol offices like Murrieta.

A 63-year-old man who raped dozens of women in Southern California then repeatedly reoffended after his release was taken to live in a home east of Palmdale Wednesday on the orders of a judge in the San Francisco Bay Area. Christopher Hubbart, dubbed the "Pillowcase Rapist," was placed in a home on a dirt road in the 20300 block of East Avenue R (map), in the unincorporated Antelope Valley, according to the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office. He was greeted by several people, including a cameraman and a woman who repeatedly shouted that the serial rapist wasn't wanted in the community and should "be afraid."

Immigration

Description of how this issue was covered

A Fontana church is caring for a group of immigrants from Central America. A bus transported 46 immigrants, mostly children, at 9 a.m. today to St. Joseph's Catholic Church, at 17080 Arrow Boulevard, according to John Andrews, spokesman for the Roman Catholic Diocese of San Bernardino. "This is a transition center here to provide the basics - food, water, clothing, medical care - and help them make a connection," Andrews said. The immigrants will be staying at a former convent at the church. Andrews said the church does not have the time nor the resources to screen families for placing the immigrants in church members' homes. The children, some of which are teenagers, are all traveling with either a parent or guardian. The U.S. government is not providing any financial assistance to the immigrants or the church. Andrews said the federal government asked the church to provide the help. However, church officials had been thinking about helping and were looking for a way to do it, he said.

Description of how this issue was covered

A gathering will be held tonight to remember the person who died in last night's crash in Long Beach. Here's some background on the crash:

On Monday, July 21, 2014, at approximately 10:15 p.m., Long Beach Police responded to the area of Ocean Boulevard and Orizaba Avenue regarding an injury traffic collision, which resulted in the death of a male adult, and serious injury to a second. When officers arrived, they discovered two unconscious male subjects. One of the subjects was lying in the grass behind the vehicle, while the other was still seated in the passenger seat of the heavily damaged vehicle. Long Beach Fire Department personnel responded to the scene and determined that the passenger, only being identified as a 27-year-old Long Beach resident, pending notification of next of kin, had sustained traumatic injuries to his head and body, and was pronounced deceased at the scene. The driver of the vehicle, identified as a 22-year-old Long Beach resident, was transported to a local hospital with internal injuries and remains in critical condition. Based on the preliminary investigation, which includes witness statements and evidence at the scene, investigators believe that two or more vehicles may have possibly been involved in street racing, while travelling westbound on Ocean Boulevard from Paloma Avenue. One of the vehicles, a yellow 2003 Honda S2000, lost control shortly after passing Paloma Avenue, and collided into two palm trees located on the south side of Ocean Boulevard directly across the intersection at Orizaba Avenue. After the collision, the other potentially involved vehicle(s) fled the scene. Whether alcohol was a factor in the collision is yet to be determined. The driver of a second vehicle was questioned and released and the investigation remains ongoing.

Description of how this issue was covered

The U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) is proposing a $12 million civil penalty against Southwest Airlines for failing to comply with Federal Aviation Regulations in three separate enforcement cases related to repairs on Boeing 737 jetliners operated by the Dallas-based airline. The FAA alleges that beginning in 2006, Southwest conducted so-called "extreme makeover" alterations to eliminate potential cracking of the aluminum skin on 44 jetliners. The FAA conducted an investigation that included both the airline and its contractor, Aviation Technical Services, Inc., (ATS) of Everett, Wash. Investigators determined that ATS failed to follow proper procedures for replacing the fuselage skins on these aircraft. FAA investigators also determined that ATS failed to follow required procedures for placing the airplanes on jacks and stabilizing them. All of the work was done under the supervision of Southwest Airlines, which was responsible for ensuring that procedures were properly followed.

A probate court judge sided with Shelly Sterling Monday in a trial to determine whether she had the authority to remove Donald Sterling from the family trust and strike a deal to sell the Los Angeles Clippers. The trial stemmed from a proposed deal brokered by Shelly Sterling in May to sell the Clippers to former Microsoft Chief Executive Steve Ballmer for $2 billion. The deal was put on hold however while a judge decided whether Donald Sterling was properly removed from the trust. Attorneys for Shelly Sterling claimed Donald Sterling was removed from the trust after two doctors found him to be mentally incapacitated, and that gave her the authority to sell the team. Donald Sterling's attorneys argued that their client was unaware of the nature of the exams and that he was still capable of running the team.

Torrential rain and rapid mudslides shut down a Southern California town Sunday, standing thousands of people and trapping 500 children and adults at a church camp. "Most roads are impassible due to mudflows" in Forest Falls, said San Bernardino Fire Capt. Kyle Hauducoeur. Even a local fire station had to be evacuated. Authorities have made contact with the Forest Home camp, where the 500 visitors were staying, and said everyone is safe -- but the camp was still trapped behind mudflow late Sunday night. Crews used bulldozers and other heavy equipment to try to reach the campers.

Orange County law enforcement, transportation officials and the Orange County Human Trafficking Task Force will hold a joint news conference to discuss the growing problem of human trafficking and efforts to put an end to the crime through strict enforcement and community partnerships. The Orange County Human Trafficking Task Force, which was founded and is currently administrated by nonprofit organization Community Service Programs, will release its 2014 Human Trafficking Victim Report. A key finding is that the number of perpetrators of human trafficking crimes in Orange County doubled between 2011 and 2013. On average, eight new human trafficking victims are identified each month in Orange County and nearly half of all victims are minors.

New information is expected to be released Monday on the disappearance of Erin Corwin, a Twentynine Palms woman who disappeared more than a month ago and has been the subject of an extensive search.

San Bernardino County Sheriff's officials have scheduled a noon press conference at their San Bernardino headquarters.

Up until now, few details have been released on the case. Corwin lived at the Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center with her husband, Cpl. Jonathan Corwin. He told investigators she was headed to Joshua Tree National Park on June 28 and he reported her missing the next day. Trained volunteers searched 200 square miles at the park, but officials rarely elaborated on whether the investigation led them outside the area. The sheriff's department previously reported there are "suspicious circumstances" surrounding Corwin's disappearance, but investigators also haven't ruled out the possibility that she left on her own accord.

L.A. schools Supt. John Deasy suspended future use of a contract with Apple on Monday that was to provide iPads to all students in the nation's second-largest school system amid mounting scrutiny of the $1-billion-plus effort. The suspension comes days after disclosures that the superintendent and his top deputy had especially close ties to executives of Apple, maker of the iPad, and Pearson, the company that is providing the curriculum on the devices. And an internal report that examined the technology effort showed major problems with the process and the implementation. UTLA issued a statement in reaction to the news that John Deasy is canceling the ill-fated iPad program, stating that Deasy needed to answer for his costly iPad blunder.

From beaches in Orange County to Ventura County....this week's massive waves and churning currents have taken a bite out of the southern California coastline. The effects of severe erosion can be seen where tons of sand have washed away....leaving behind huge sand berms and steep drop-offs. At Newport Beach's famous 'Wedge,' about a five foot cliff has suddenly appeared at the high-tide line because the sand has simply disappeared in recent days....washed out to sea. The same dramatic effects of beach erosion can also be seen up the coast at Zuma Beach, where bulldozers are working to stem any further erosion. And...a few miles north of here, near Point Mugu, the powerful surf claimed the landmark 'Malibu Cliff House' lifeguard headquarters, eroding and undermining the foundation, causing the structure to collapse into the surging sea. Usually, the calm, summer conditions allow the sand to fill back in and replenish what has washed away from the powerful storms that are typical of winter. But not this year. Now, with the winter storm season still ahead, some are wondering if the sand that's disappeared the past few days may be lost for good...

On the afternoon of July 27, a bolt of lightning from an unexpected summer storm struck Venice Beach. LA County Fire Department Lifeguards and Los Angeles Fire Department units sprang into action to assist numerous injured people. The first person rescued from the ocean was 56-year-old Robert Kilroy, an off-duty seasonal LA County Lifeguard and a professional chiropractor. Dr. Kilroy was pulled by his 15-year-old daughter Emily from the water in cardiac arrest. First responders began immediate CPR on Dr. Kilroy and transported him to Ronald Reagan UCLA Medical Center in Westwood. Four days later he was discharged from the hospital after making a full recovery and has returned to work and his normal everyday activities. Tragically, one individual also in the ocean at the time succumbed to his injuries.

A man was found guilty of murder in the shooting deaths of a 2-year-old boy, his mother and the child's nanny in a Miracle Mile apartment nine years ago. Robin Kyu Cho, 53, could face the death penalty for the 2003 killings, to which he was connected through DNA evidence six years after the victims were found shot and killed in the bathroom of the family's apartment. Cho lived three floors below the victims, on the ground floor of the apartment complex. The genetic material was recovered on the torn tips of a latex glove found stuck to packing tape that was used to gag and bind the 30-year-old mother. During the trial, which began in early May, a prosecutor narrated for jurors the day's events using surveillance camera images, crime scene photos and reconstruction experts. The child and nanny were probably shot first in the bathtub, with the 56-year-old nanny, Eun-sik Min, shielding the toddler with her body.

The Los Angeles City Council will vote Wednesday on a proposed ordinance creating a $15.37 an hour minimum wage for hotel workers. Supporters of the measure, known as the Raise LA coalition, will testify during public comment and urge the councilmembers to vote yes on the new law. The ordinance, introduced in February by Councilmembers Curren Price, Mike Bonin and Nury Martinez, would mean a boost for some 15,000 workers in LA's biggest low-wage industry. The ordinance would apply to workers in hotels with 150 rooms or more. Advocates say the law will pump millions into the local economy, and has the support of 17 neighborhood councils, 750 small businesses and more than 8,000 individuals. Research shows that LA hotel workers bring home an average of $18,000 a year. Many full-time hotel workers must work two jobs or rely on public assistance just to get by. Meanwhile, the hotel industry is booming. LA's tourism is at an all time high, hosting more visitors in 2013 than ever before. The city's largest hotels are projected to earn $1 billion in hotel room sales this year.

Description of how this issue was covered

A child was treated at a Long Beach hospital for enterovirus D68, marking the first confirmed case of a virus that's been recently spreading across the nation to be diagnosed in Los Angeles County.

Miller Children's Hospital spokeswoman Wendy Dow confirmed early Wednesday that a case of the virus was treated at the hospital. It was not immediately clear whether the child had been released, or what condition they were in. State health officials confirmed that the first four cases of the non-polio enterovirus, which can cause severe respiratory illness in children, were diagnosed in Southern California nearly two weeks ago. Three of the patients were in San Diego County, while the fourth was in Ventura County, according to the California Department of Public Health. Roughly 472 people have been sickened by the enterovirus in 41 states across the country since mid-August, according to the latest figures from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Infants, children, and teenagers are most likely to get infected with the virus and become ill, CDC stated on its website. Symptoms include fever, runny nose, sneezing, cough and body and muscle aches. The virus can also cause more severe symptoms such as wheezing and breathing difficulty. "These children start with what seems like a normal cold on the first day - runny nose, a little bit of cough - but by the second day, they can't breathe at all. They come in and they need a tube to help them breathe," according to Dr. Pia Pannaraj, an infectious diseases specialist at Children's Hospital Los Angeles. There is no specific treatment for the disease, nor is there a vaccine to prevent its spread. The virus likely spreads between people when an infected person coughs, sneezes, or touches contaminated surfaces, according to CDC.
