MUTUAL OF OMAHA'S WILD KINGDOM PROTECTING THE WILD DESERT-DWELLING TORTOISES [WLK101]

Join us as we venture to the Edwards Air Force Base in the Mojave Desert to observe an ancient and important creature that is on the brink of extinction. Desert tortoises have been living in this region for over thirty million years. But in recent decades, widespread urbanization has radically changed this environment and the resulting habitat loss is causing the tortoise population to disappear. Thanks, in part, to conservation biologists working in this area to raise a whopping seventy tortoises a year, they may yet have a fighting chance. But that's just one part of the problem; ravens are a common threat to tortoises and their numbers have only increased due to man-made developments. Field biologist Tim Smith shows us his high-tech solutions for combating the invasive presence of ravens through the use of pressure-triggered repellants and firing lasers to redirect them from nesting in the area. These methods utilize a raven's vast intelligence to retrain their behavior in hopes this will help re-balance the ecosystem.

PINT-SIZED PREDATORS [EDD601]

Host Dylan Dreyer is giving us a preview on the lifestyles of some of nature's predators. We observe these animals in their youth, learning the ropes of their predatorial futures in the animal kingdom. Each species has a unique set of attributes that give a competitive advantage, such as play-fighting with their fellow youngsters, which teaches defense and helps establish a pecking order or satisfying their enormous appetites to develop their size and strength. For instance, infant baboons can feed up to twelve times per day, and lion cubs will grow over one hundred times their size! But bigger isn't always better, and the smaller predators need to rely on other methods of protection. The dwarf mongoose, for example, at a mere fourteen ounces, often works with birds to capture prey and warn each other of danger, and leopards, the smallest of the big cats, use their iconic spots as camouflage against their enemies.

[Educational Message: Predators come in all shapes and sizes. Their entire existence relies on the ability to hunt and prey on other animals, and they must learn what it takes to survive in the wild to earn their roles in the food chain.]

At the DAAA Games, Hotshot and X-Over from the Harlem Globetrotters teach basketball skills to children with dwarfism and emphasize the value of having teammates who recognize the unique obstacles that people with dwarfism experience in sports and daily life. Furthermore, as the team engages with the nonprofit organization Comfort Cases, their understanding deepens as they actively participate in the process of filling backpacks with basic items, ensuring that children in foster care homes have a more dignified transition, and underscoring the importance of providing children with proper support rather than relying on ordinary garbage bags while fostering a sense of care and affection for the children served. In an unexpected turn of events, Wham arranges a skydiving venture for his cousin Ira, a former military servicemember, with the help of an organization that aids veterans, ultimately giving them a renewed sense of purpose.

Tom Kim shares his experiences and insights into his career in golf. A heartwarming story revolves around a young man named Harry, who has faced numerous challenges in his life. As his story unfolds, Harry unexpectedly

WILD CHILD

AWWW-STRALIA [WLC201]

Today on Wild Child, host Sheinelle Jones leads us on an adventure down under to discover the cutest and youngest animals living in Australia. While Australia might be the world's smallest continent, it has some of the animal kingdom's biggest characters. More than eighty percent of its plants, mammals, reptiles, and frogs can only be found on this massive and isolated island. First up, we'll start the day with a family of eastern grey kangaroos as they begin their morning routine. We'll learn that when kangaroos are first born, the youngsters are only roughly the size of a jellybean. While they are surrounded by grass, these babies won't start having a nibble until they leave their mother's pouches at around ten months old. In the meantime, these babies will continue to enjoy their mother's milk. We'll learn that mother kangaroos produce two different types of milk for each stage of their joey's growth. We'll also discover that once a joey has left the pouch, often its mother gives birth to another joey that has been lying dormant so she can have two joeys suckling on her at once. Next, we'll join a family of emus to discover how this bird species survives and thrives in the Australian bush. We'll discover that there are over six hundred locations in Australia named after the emu. Here we'll witness the next generation of emus learning the fine points of bush dining from their parents. However, when it comes to raising the babies, the dads do all the work. These emu chicks might be small now, but eventually they'll grow up to be the second largest birds in the world. To reach this massive size, they'll pack on a variety of insects, fruits, grass, and seeds.

[Educational Message: In this episode, we discovered more of Australia's remarkable and rare animal families. Many of these species aren't found anywhere else in the world, which makes their indelible connection to the land all the more unique and amazing.]

EXTREMELY WILD [EDD401]

Today on Earth Odyssey, host Dylan Dreyer takes us on a trip to visit the most extreme places on Earth. First up, we'll take a journey to the mountains of Southern China to find the animals that survive and thrive in a most unforgiving environment. In the high-altitude forests, we'll discover a strange primate that roams the frozen landscape, the snub-nosed monkey. Capable of withstanding the punishing conditions, we'll learn that snub-nosed monkeys live at the highest altitude of any primate on Earth. Living in colonies of around sixty individuals and isolated on mountain tops, we'll discover how snub-nosed monkeys have uniquely evolved to cope with the extreme conditions of Southern China. Next, we'll travel to Northern Africa to the Sahara Desert to find the unique wildlife that call this harsh region home. Roughly the size of the United States of America, the Sahara Desert is a treacherous place to live given its extreme temperatures and constant sandstorms. Here we'll discover a creature that is supremely adapted to the severe desert conditions, the sandfish. We learn that sandfish are actually a type of skink species. While
