EARTH ODYSSEY WITH DYLAN DREYER THE FAMOUS FACES OF AFRICA [EDD520]

Host Dylan Dreyer is taking us on an African adventure to see the celebrities of the savanna! On this adventure, we get up-close and personal with animals and insects as they compete in challenges of skill and talent. These animals range in size and strength, from the largest land mammal, the elephant, which weighs up to seven tons to the strongest insect in the world, the dung beetle, an insect capable of shifting a mass one-thousand one hundred forty-one times its own weight! Surviving in the savannah isn't all competition, it also involves teamwork, such as the red-billed oxpecker and its quick work of eating hundreds of parasites off most forms of animals in just one minute or the gorillas who make childrearing a shared task of the troupe. Plus, we make a local stop in Chicago at the Brookfield Zoo to meet Sophia the leopard tortoise and learn a little bit about what makes her species so unique.

[Educational Message: Being superstars of the savanna is no easy task; it takes work and resilience and a bit of teamwork. From the massive elephant to the modest dung beetle, Africa's rich ecosystem shows us nature's brilliance and interconnectivity in its many forms.]

WILD CHILD RARE FINDS [WLC323]

Host Sheinelle Jones looks back at the rarest finds from all our adventures this season – the oddly unique, the hard to find, and the one-of-a-kind characters that made a lasting impression. In the first part of our journey, we study one of ten rarest species on Earth, the hawksbill turtle, and learn that hawksbill turtles help maintain a healthy coral reef ecosystem by clearing harmful organisms. This species of sea turtle is critically endangered, but there are many conservation groups working to boost its population. Hawksbill sea turtles get their name from their narrow heads and hawk-like beaks that allow them to reach into coral crevices to snack on their favorite food, sponges, devouring over one thousand pounds a year. On land, conservation environments like zoos exist around the world as home for species who are endangered in the wild, such as the white tiger. The white tiger is extremely rare, only appearing once in every ten thousand natural births, and like many cubs in the cat family, enjoys swimming and playing. In some areas, it's fellow animals themselves that can assist in vital conservation efforts, such as the konik horses, whose grazing activities on invasive weeds and vegetation usually avoided by other animals helps create ideal ecosystems. We continue our journey back at the zoo in its breeding program with the red panda whose litters are usually not more than two helpless cubs, born with their eyes and ears closed. Small cameras in a mother red panda's den give us a secret window into her world at this special time.

[Educational Message: Earth is filled with a number of rare, unique, and one-of-a-kind creatures. Many of our most unique species are becoming harder and harder to observe in the wild due to various threats to their survival with over 41,000 species at risk of extinction, but thanks to conservation efforts and protected habitats, many of these animals are getting a helping hand.]

HARLEM GLOBETROTTERS: PLAY IT FORWARD
HOMECOMING [HGL123]

Craig Robinson takes us along with the Globetrotters as we prepare for some heartfelt moments, inspirational spirits, and high dunks. Torch and Jet visit Yeah-Art in Oakland, California, an organization that provides free arts education for underserved children, where the inventive students remix the original Harlem Globetrotters theme song with sounds from found objects. From there, Coach Lou joins Hammer, Bulldog, and the team where the players learn about the history and humble beginnings of the Harlem Globetrotters. The team's history began, not in Harlem but, in Chicago at Wendell Phillips Academy High School, Chicago's oldest black high school, where the team was originally known as the Savoy Big Five. The team officially became The Harlem Globetrotters in 1927 after meeting Abe Saperstein. It wasn't until 1950, when the show was taken on the road and officially started their "globetrotting" travels. Hammer, Torch, and Wham end their journey at a micro-home community in Atlanta to lend a helping hand to first-time homebuyers. Here, the players learn that the cost of living has been driven to an all-time high due, in part, to neighborhood gentrification (the process where a poor urban area becomes more expensive as a result of community development) and meet one housing development, South Park, that is aimed at addressing these increasing costs by selling affordable, sustainable micro-homes to first-time homebuyers at prices that result in similar mortgage rates that these buyers may be paying for apartments in the area.

[Educational Message: Everyday objects can be used to create art and music. History, such as the history of the Harlem Globetrotters, can be fascinating, varied, and inspiring; and the negative effects of gentrification caused by the rising costs imposed by community development may be addressed by affordable housing options, allowing for first-time homebuyers to start the process of building generational wealth.]
