Host: Dominic Dezzutti
Panel: Patricia Calhoun – Westword, David Kopel – Independence Institute and DU Law School, Ed Sealover – Denver Business Journal, Susan Greene – ColoradoIndependent.com

Topic 1: Glenn Haggstrom, one of the key EXECUTIVES in charge of the building of the VA Hospital in Aurora resigned this week after calls for his firing from many congressional officials. Rep. Mike Coffman is drafting a bill that would deny any bonuses to VA officials involved with the hospital until after it is completed.

Topic 2: A 22 year old from Oklahoma on a ski vacation in Keystone shot himself last weekend after reportedly ingesting five times the recommended amount of marijuana edibles. Toxicology reports are not yet available, but family members blame the suicide on the edibles. If found to be a contributing factor, this will be the third death blamed on edibles since the passage of Amendment 64.

Topic 3: A report released this week shows 50% of the oil rigs in Colorado that were active last October are now idle. Colorado joins North Dakota and Oklahoma who are also seeing major drops in production due to the low price of oil.

topic 4: Republican State representative Gordon Klingenschmitt outraged members of his own party and democrats alike with his comments about the attack of a Longmont woman on his radio program. Fellow republicans from around the state have spent the week telling media that Klingenschmitt does not speak for the Republican Party.

TOPIC 1: The state of Indiana became the focus of national ire this week after Governor Mike Pence signed a religious freedom bill into law. Denver's city government joined several other entities across the country in suspending any travel plans to Indiana. On Thursday, both Arkansas and Indiana offered amendments to each of their religious freedom acts.

TOPIC 2: State Representative Gordon Klingenschmitt was removed from the house health, insurance and environment committee by house leadership this week. Fellow republican Rep. Justin Everett said that the punishment sets a dangerous precedent.

TOPIC 3: The Littleton public school board announced on Thursday that it will enter arbitration with the family of Claire Davis regarding full disclosure of details of the Arapahoe high school shooting. The agreement states that the family will not sue the school and that the information can be made public 45 days after it is released to the family.

Topic 4: The Aurora city council is currently split regarding the future of city manager Skip Noe. Five councilwomen want Noe fired, citing problems regarding his behavior toward them. Noe has also become a topic of a growing group of candidates looking to run for mayor of Aurora

Issues Addressed: Cancer Treatment, Colorado Wildfires
Host: Cynthia Hessin
Guests: Kristen Jones, Daniel Glick, Ted Wood

New treatments for cancer, CU Hospital: At the University of Colorado Cancer Center in Aurora, scientists are pioneering more targeted treatments than ever. Colorado has the 3rd lowest cancer death rate in the U.S. yet cancer is the leading cause of death in Colorado. Kristin Jones talks with oncologist Dr. Ross Camidge, who discusses new treatments for lung cancer, and with patients who are “test pilots” for new drugs. Wildfires in Colorado have increased since the mid-80s and they’re wider spread, the seasons are longer. The “Red Zone”, which is the wild land urban interface, has expanded 60% over the last 45 years, where wild fires are a major part of the ecology. Fires have become more volatile, more destructive and faster moving. Two journalists, Dan Glick and Ted Wood, are filmmakers behind the documentary “Unacceptable Risk: Firefighters on the Front Lines of Climate Change.” The filmmakers say there is no fire season, this is a year round issue. They want to get the word out of changing fire behaviors because of climate change and building on the wild land urban interface, fuel build-up in the forest from a century of fighting fires, building where fire is part of the natural environment and, the wild card – climate change. Rising temperatures dry out the forest fuels, increased risk of drought leaves the forest less healthy, invasion of the pine beetles kill trees. Firefighters used computer models to determine where a fire’s spreading, but can’t rely on those models now.

Program: The Aaron Harber Show

Eric Sondermann – Political Analyst
Penfield Tate – Attorney, Greenberg Traurig

TOPIC 1: Progress on the state budget at the legislature may be in jeopardy after the house attached funding for a controversial birth control program as it passed the 25 billion dollar budget. The bill now goes to the Joint Budget Committee to negotiate final details, but republicans already have balked at the addition of the program.

TOPIC 2: The ballots for Denver's municipal election go out on Monday featuring fifty total candidates for the 13 seats on the council. There are six open seats on the council and those races represent 29 of the candidates, with 9 running in District 7 alone.

TOPIC 3: Governor John Hickenlooper wrote a letter to lawmakers this week possibly threatening to veto a bill that would move the child abuse watchdog from the executive branch to the legislative branch. Hickenlooper wants the ombudsman to stay in the executive branch through a type one transfer, granting more independence, but child advocates disagree.

TOPIC 4: The University of Colorado at Denver released a report this week that claims homelessness is being criminalized in Denver. Meanwhile, more complaints are being heard about the GENERAL lack of public restrooms in downtown Denver, leading to other problems regarding the homeless.

Topic/Title: Dan Gross, Part 2
Air Date: Tuesday, April 21, 2015 5:30am
Duration: 30 minutes
Style/Type: Interview Format
Source: Colorado Public Television 12
Issues Addressed: Gun Violence
Guest: Dan Gross, President, Brady Campaign and Center to Prevent Gun Violence

Dan Gross discusses solutions for gun violence, supporting expanded or universal background checks and the “Gun Show Loophole”. Colorado is one state which has closed this loophole, which means that guns can be bought at shows or online without a background check unless it is bought from a federally licensed firearm dealer. He questions the public’s request for armed guards at schools as this was not effective at Fort Hood or Columbine High School. He prefers policy solutions, and addressing behavioral modifications or social norms that contribute to gun violence such as economic injustice, access to guns at homes with children and military spouses being aware of suicide rates among soldiers.

Source: KRMA-6, Rocky Mountain Public Broadcasting Station
Issues Addressed: Adjunct Instructors, Gas Tax, Arts District Update
Guests: Andy Dorsey, Suzanne Hudson, Dan Boyce, Carrie Saldo

Adjunct instructors get low pay - Compensation for adjunct instructors at Colorado Community colleges is so low many are just barely scraping by, forced to rely on assistance from family, charities and social safety net programs. State Senator John Kefalas describes the disparity in wages, where there are 2 tiers, 1st tier is 70% of teaching staff is adjunct, P/T, less pay and benefits, even though their qualifications match the 2nd tier. Suzanne Hudson, Colorado Conference, American Assn. of University Professors, says the compensation disparity has grown over the last 30 years and says legislation has been put forward twice to end the 2 tier system and move to a more fair system. Andy Dorsey, President, Front Range Community College served on a task force looking at the adjunct situation and how to improve their compensation. The recommendations that have been accepted could be in place by fall. Relying on state funding and tuition has been cited as the reason for lower pay. Raising gas taxes in order to repair our deteriorating infrastructure. The gas tax has not been raised in Colorado in 20 years. Dan Boyce, Inside Energy, said CO. road projects will cost over $1 billion. With more people use fuel efficient cars and younger people are driving less, Colorado is looking for other ways to cover infrastructure repairs as a gas tax will not be enough to cover these costs. Plans to fix roads include entering partnerships with private companies, charging toll fees, raising the sales tax and/or paying tax on the miles you drive. Carrie Saldo, Arts Distric Update, discusses the Women's + Film Festival/Voice to highlight Women's History Month. Tammy Brislin, co-founder/producer of the festival, brings stories of women around the world to viewers. Phone no., address, tape info. Given in program. www.rmpps.org

Panel: Lynn Bartels – The Denver Post, EricSondermann – Political Analyst
David Kopel – Independence Institute and DU Law
Natasha Gardner – Senior Editor, 5280 Magazine

TOPIC 1: A proposal that would expand the current magazine ammunition limit to 30 rounds is triggering an interesting battle among gun rights advocates in Colorado. Rocky Mountain Gun Owners are against the idea and have urged lawmakers to only accept a full repeal of the limit. Meanwhile, others including the Independence institute believe the concept is a step in the right direction.

TOPIC 2: Governor John Hickenlooper sent a letter to state lawmakers on Thursday urging major changes to how Colorado collects revenue and issues taxpayer refunds. Legislators from both sides of the aisle met the letter with skepticism, saying there isn't enough time left in the session to tackle something so complicated.

TOPIC 3: The Colorado Republican Party may have quelled a growing controversy by inviting the log cabin republicans to share its booth at the Western Conservative Summit. Earlier in the week, the organization was disinvited from setting up a table by event organizers.

TOPIC 4: Setbacks in the construction of the VA Hospital continues this week as VA officials reported that current blueprints show The facility will not be large enough to meet future healthcare demands. Adding a psychiatric rehabilitation ward is also being considered, which could send costs for the nearly 2 billion dollar project even higher.

Topic 1: Governor John Hickenlooper, along with former Governors Roy Romer AND Bill Owens, publicly addressed and supported standardized testing in Colorado this week. the three governors are at odds with wings of both parties who support Senate Bill 223, which would prohibit penalties for those who opt out of testing.

Topic 2: A controversial fetal homicide bill gained initial approval in the state Senate Judiciary Committee this week. Republicans drafted the bill in response to the recent assault of a Longmont woman but opponents refer to it as a vague approach to the personhood issue.

Topic 3: Urban development was a big topic at the legislature this week. A bill that would address a section of Colorado's construction defects law was sent to the house "kill committee". Meanwhile, a proposal that would require cities to secure voter approval before using blighted status to redevelop agricultural land is also expected soon.

Topic 4: With just 10 days before Denver's municipal election, let's take a look at how the races are lining up. Mayor Michael Hancock, who is not facing any well-funded opposition, released tv ads this week and city council district races continue to be fought bitterly.

Issues Addressed: Wage Theft, "The Cotery", Rape Kit Story, Fracking
Guests: Steven D. Zansberg, Anna Boiko-Weyerauch, Kristen Jones, Leigh Paterson

Colorado has more power to protect workers from wage theft than ever. The new law gives the Dept. of Labor more power to collect unpaid wages, helping workers who were never paid to receive unpaid compensation. But a law from 1915 is shielding the process behind a veil of secrecy. In 1915, the CO. Legislature was writing the first Workers Comp. Law. However wording stated that information regarding employees and employers should be for the government's eyes only. C-sponsors of a new state law the went in to effect this year "The Wage Protection Act" beefs up the state's power to collect wages from employers. How the falling oil prices are affecting the industry

Carrie Saldo discusses Boulder-based company "The Cotery", which uses technology to blend fashion design and art, designing t-shirts from a browser base design tool where designers can choose a fabric design, type of garment and upload their artwork, set a retail price and launch a campaign, and Citybuild Denver, an event where 7 speakers ask "What do you love about Denver?", describes art as integral to the social fabric of Denver.

Duration: 30 minutes
Style/Type: Interview Format
Source: Colorado Public Television 12
Issues Addressed: Oil Industry, Clean Energy
Guest: T. Boone Pickens

T. Boone Pickens, American oil magnate and the Chair of BP Capital Management, talks about his tireless work trying to get bills passed in D.C. as well as his career of work in the U.S. oil industry. He discusses the military post WWII, wars directed by politicians, the defense spending in the Middle East, costs of protecting oil going through the Strait of Hormuz, a need for an energy plan for the U.S, leadership needed to sell this plan to Congress, his support for a North American energy alliance – US, Canada, Mexico – as we would not need to spend money protecting those energy sources, horizontal drilling and removing unnecessary, costly regulation hindering an energy plan. He supports educating Americans on the benefits of natural gas, being $2/gallon cheaper than diesel and 30% cleaner. California was the first state to use natural gas for transportation to improve air quality. Trash trucks also converted and natural gas can be used for trains. The "Pickens Plan" calls for the greater use of domestic natural gas to replace foreign oil/diesel/gasoline in America's heavy duty vehicles.

Colorado has more power to protect workers from wage theft than ever. The new law gives the Dept. of Labor more power to collect unpaid wages, helping workers receive unpaid compensation. But a law from 1915 is shielding the process behind a veil of secrecy. In 1915, the CO. Legislature wrote the first Workers Comp. Law, however wording stated that information regarding employees and employers should be for the government's eyes only. C-sponsors of a new state law the went in to effect this year "The Wage Protection Act" beefs up the state's power to collect wages from employers.

Carrie Saldo discusses Boulder-based company "The Cotery", which uses technology to blend fashion design and art, designing t-shirts from a browser base design tool where designers can choose a fabric design, type of garment and upload their artwork, set a retail price and launch a campaign, and Citybuild Denver, an event where 7 speakers ask "What do you love about Denver?", describes art as integral to the social fabric of Denver.

Topic 1: Gang-related violence erupted in Denver's north east neighborhood last week. Denver Safety Manager Stephanie O'Malley announced on Thursday that the city will invest half a million dollars into community outreach. Mayor Michael Hancock has ordered the police department to beef up patrols and install additional halo cameras in the affected area. .

Topic 2: The Aurora Theater trial began this week with harsh yet revealing testimony into the events leading up to the July 2012 incident. Arapahoe County D-A George Brachler pointed to two separate psychiatric evaluations indicating the suspect was found to be sane at the time of the shootings.

Topic 3: House Bill 1388, a bill that would infuse the Public Employee Retirement Association, or PERA, with new funds from bonds, passed a state house committee this week. The bill faces a tougher test in the state senate but has backing from Governor Hickenlooper and the Colorado Education Association.

Topic 4: Governor Hickenlooper sent a letter to lawmakers on Thursday urging them to not pass a bill that would ban red light cameras and photo radar, but rather reform the policies that govern their use.

Host: Cynthia Hessin
Guests: Kristin Jones, Anna Boiko-Weyerauch, Katie Kuntz, Steve Chavis

Health Care for Undocumented Workers: Hospitals in Colorado are allowed to extend charity care to undocumented immigrants -- but it's not easy to find. Federal law keeps emergency rooms from turning anyone away but, when it comes to more specialized care, access is spotty for those who can't prove citizenship. 4-20 Celebrations/Marijuana: 71% of the state doesn't allow sale of medical or retail marijuana, however there are more pot shops than Starbucks in Colorado. $90 million revenue has been generated from taxes, licenses and fees since fiscal year 2013, and from fiscal year 2013 to 2014, there has been a 270% increase in the amount the state has collected. The Taxpayers Bill of Rights requires that the state has to give refunds when they make more money than they supposed to. The state is working on the budget to determine who will get refunds. Steve Chavis, KUVU Public Insight Networks Editor, discussed 420 celebrations, marijuana going mainstream and related job creation, pot tourism enterprises. Mariel Rodriguez- McGill in Walsenberg: after losing energy jobs years ago and eventually experiencing 20% poverty rate, Walsenberg may soon be going green. Mayor Eccher, said that a big-box store, a truck stop and co-ops building greenhouses are in the plans for Walsenberg, which should improve employment prospects.

Source: Colorado Public Television 12
Issues Addressed: Race relations, Improving America
Guest: Rev. Jesse Jackson

The Reverend Jesse Jackson, Founder & President, Rainbow Push Coalition discusses Martin Luther King's dream speech, how U.S. social progress and race relations have improved in some ways over the last 50 years but there's still a violent undercurrent. Jackson talks about the freedom rides, being jailed in civil rights battles, the right to vote in '65, real estate agents' redlining schemes, that MLK's last speech would have been to revamp our budget priorities, wipe out malnutrition, build affordable housing, which is today's unfinished business. He also supports statehood for Washington D.C., which in its current state, disenfranchises citizens of our capital and does not give them a federal vote. Other topics, the state of democracy in Africa, receiving President Clinton's Medal of Freedom, our need for environmental sensitivity, job creation, green technology to reduce dependence on energy, and making a better America through fair distribution of resources, ending voter manipulation and access to healthcare.

Topic 1: Denver's municipal elections were held on Tuesday and while Mayor Hancock cruised to re-election, two incumbent council members were defeated in surprising upsets, Susan Shepherd in district one and Chris Nevitt in the auditor's race. Meanwhile, four of the six open seats on the council will go to a runoff election in June.

Topic 2: With the 2015 legislative session coming to a fast and furious end on Wednesday, let's take a look at what bills survived and what bills died in the flurry of activity during the final days of the session.

Topic 3: Governor John Hickenlooper said this week that he was disappointed lawmakers did not tackle what he calls Colorado's fiscal thicket during the legislative session. The governor plans to take his proposal to the people through a series of town hall meetings this summer and fall.

Topic 4: The Denver post reported this week that high ranking VA officials knew about problems with the Colorado hospital back in 2011, yet no changes surfaced until two years later.

Guests: Rod Moraga, Daniel Glick

Guests Rod Moraga, Fire Management Consultant and Daniel Glick give an inside look in to the wild land fires that have hit Colorado over the last decade. In featured short "Unacceptable Risk", film makers Ted Wood and Daniel Glick make a case that climate change is largely to blame for the transformation of fire that we've seen in recent years. Changes such as drought-stricken trees, higher temperatures and lack of spring moisture have shifted the fire environment. Fossil-fuel emissions is the key driver of climate change creating more hazardous conditions for fire fighters. Other factors include more people living in the wild land urban interface, buildup of fuel in these areas where fire fighters have been putting out fires for a 100 years and higher temperatures in Colorado, which have risen twice as fast as the global average . UNACCEPTABLE RISK tells the story of the major wildfires of the past ten years in Colorado, in which veteran firefighters connect global warming directly to the way fire behavior has become unpredictable. Follow-up discussion with fire behavior analyst Rod Moraga (also a former firefighter), and filmmaker Daniel Glick. Fire behavior analyst (and former firefighter) Rod Moraga and filmmaker Daniel Glick discuss what they believe must happen to pull back from climate change and all its unpredictable risks.

Guest: Tom Keirnan, CEO American Wind Energy Assn. (AWEA)

Tom Kiernan talks about AWEA which has 1300 members throughout the country, mainly companies that play a role in the wind energy industry. Wind energy grew 2010-2012 and going forward to 2025 should increase to produce electricity that doesn't generate carbon emissions or use water, saving consumers money and benefitting farmers. In 2013, the loss of the Production Tax Credit (PTC) slowed growth, however the credit has been extended. A long-term credit plan would give wind energy stability, that coal, gas and oil industries have enjoyed for years. The industry has created 80,000 jobs and 550 plants building parts. Tom also discusses new technology, variable speed opportunities, need to upgrade the grid, so transmission lines are in places where we need them while protecting the environment for migratory birds and other wildlife.

Guests: Anna Boiko-Weyrauch, Maeve Conran, James Eklund, Carrie Saldo

Hundreds of Chipotle employees claim they worked more hours than they were paid for. The Colorado-based chain is facing nine separate law suits, part of a larger national trend. 643 plaintiffs from Washington to New York are seeking compensation, yet executives' pay is higher than Coca-cola and Walmart executives, and the CEO pay is higher than the McDonalds CEO.

The state is working on a plan the looks 25 years in to the future to meet growing water demand. Maeve Conran, KGNU Community Radio, said that the State Demographer has suggested that Colorado will grow from 5 million in 2010 to 7.8 million by 2040, the bulk of the growth in the Front Range from Fort Collins to south of Denver. James Eklund, CO. Water Conservation Board, discusses Colorado as a head water state, supplying 18 downstream states and Mexico, and the Colorado River cooperative Agreement. They talk about areas of Colorado, such as Westminster and Aurora, incentivizing developers to conserve water by reducing lawn and landscaped areas on new properties, and "Connecting the Drops", educating the public about water use, basins and storage projects. Carrie Saldo discusses Denver Art Museum's recent decision to make the museum free for kids, events at the Equinox Theatre and the Denver Mart drive-in.

Topic 1: Turmoil within the leadership of the Colorado republican party made headlines this week. State chair Steve House said this week that he was being pushed to resign by Attorney General Cynthia Coffman and former representative Tom Tancredo. Coffman and Tancredo deny the claims, saying that this is now a personnel matter.

Topic 2: The Colorado Supreme Court ruled this week in favor of an employer who fired an employee who used medical marijuana. Meanwhile, the same cannabis advocates that brought Amendment 64 to the ballot hope to bring a new ballot measure that would allow private businesses to set aside a section for recreational pot use.

Topic 3: Possible topic – the prosecution in the Aurora theater trial may rest its case in less than a week, with the defense planning to complete the presentation of its case by early July. Judge Carlos Xamour excused two more jurors this week, bringing the total in the pool down to 19.
