Alaska Senator Ted Stevens has been indicted for failing to disclose gifts he received from VECO Corporation, an Alaska-based oil services company. But his indictment is only the latest news - and perhaps the tip of the iceberg - in an ongoing political scandal that's rocking the state and Congress. This week, NOW goes behind the breaking headlines to shine a bright light on the scandalous connection between VECO and Alaska's old-boy political network. Three state legislators have already been convicted in Federal court for accepting bribes from VECO, and the FBI has video and audio evidence that reveal VECO executives shockingly handing out cash to those legislators in exchange for promises to roll back a tax on the oil industry. And more lawmakers - including Senator Stevens' own son, former Alaska State Senate President Ben Stevens - are being eyed in the growing scandal. NOW continues its ongoing investigation into the bribes, the connections to big oil and the payoffs to obtain friendly tax policies.

In 2006, Congress authorized the Secure Fence Act - a multi-billion dollar plan to build hundreds of miles of fencing along the southern border of the United States to stem the flow of undocumented immigrants and provide security from potential terrorism. But what was built to fight illegal immigration has turned into a nightmare for many Americans living along the U.S.-Mexico border. The fence, which will cover less than half of the actual border, inexplicably cuts through the middle of some properties, while leaving others untouched. Many question if it can keep people from sneaking in at all. This week, NOW senior correspondent Maria Hinojosa travels to Texas to meet border families who fear losing their property, their safety, and their way of life. We also follow an investigative reporter who questions whether certain landowners are getting preferential treatment. Is America's border fence working, or an utter waste?

With Barack Obama officially nominated as the Democrat's Presidential nominee, is it time to re-think affirmative action? This week, NOW on PBS looks at some state ballot measures that would eliminate race or gender considerations in public hiring, contracting and education programs. The controversial initiatives are being spearheaded by Ward Connerly, a long-time affirmative action opponent who some are accusing of ballot fraud. "I think that in some quarters, many parts of the country, a white male is really disadvantaged," Connerly, who considers himself multi-racial, tells NOW. "Because we have developed this notion of women and minorities being so disadvantaged and we have to help them, that we have, in many cases, twisted the thing so that it's no longer a case of equal opportunity. It's a case of putting a fist on the scale."

When Pakistani filmmaker Sabiha Sumar chose to make a film about democracy in her country, she didn't just request a traditional interview with the Pakistani president Pervez Musharraf, she insisted on a formal dinner. To her surprise, Musharraf -- who is facing impeachment charges after running Pakistan for nearly nine years -- agreed. Sumar spent the evening grilling Musharraf about the state of affairs in their sharply polarized culture. Sumar's documentary, "Dinner With the President," includes candid interviews with a wide range of Pakistanis, from religious fundamentalists to partiers on a Pakistani beach. This week, NOW's David Brancaccio talks with Sumar about the film, about America's cultural and political relationship with Pakistan, and about Musharraf's desire to democratize his nation while functioning as its dictator. Is Pakistan the biggest security threat in the world? As the crisis facing Musharraf deepens, a filmmaker shares her rare insider's view of a troubled leader in a troubled country.

The $1 trillion bailout. What does it mean for our global standing, our bank accounts, our politics, tonight on "Washington Week." Pres. George Bush said, "This is a pivotal moment for America's economy." Treasury Sec. Henry Paulson said, "We must now take further decisive action to fundamentally and comprehensively address the root cause of our financial system's stresses." Rep. Michelle Bachman (R-MN) said, "First we were told that Bear Stearns was too big to fail, then we're told that Freddie, Fannie were too big to fail, then we were told that AIG was too big too fail. What's next - Starbucks too big to fail?" One thing is clear: This week's economic news is too big to ignore. And apparently, not so big that blame cannot be assessed. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "My friends, this is the problem with Washington. People like Senator Obama have been too busy gaming the system and haven't ever done a thing to actually challenge the system." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "We are in the most serious financial crisis in generations, yet Senator McCain stood up yesterday and said that the fundamentals of the economy are strong." Yet, this economic meltdown may well provide the answer to the question, who will be our next president? Covering the week, David Wessel of the Wall Street Journal, John Maggs of National Journal, Jeanne Cummings of Politico, and Charles Babington of the Associated Press.

When Ronald Reagan's first term reached its halfway point, he was challenged with tremendous economic strife, the recession and unemployment had battered Reaganomics. As the Pentagon spent $34 million per hour on building up U.S. military forces and nuclear weapons, the deficit increased. However, an economic transformation in 1983 and the slow return of Americans to work secured a second term for Reagan -- a term that would afford him his greatest triumphs and his most difficult blows. "The American Experience" chronicles Reagan's last four years in office -- from the loss of his closest advisors and the Iran-Contra scandal, to the dawning of the fall of Communism in Europe.

Chaos, disarray, panic and dismay. From Wall Street to Pennsylvania Avenue to Oxford, Mississippi, tonight on "Washington Week." The bailout bust. House Majority Leader Sen. Harry Reid (D-NV) said, "The insertion of presidential politics has not been helpful." House Minority Leader John Boehner (R-OH) said, "We will not agree to a bill that sells taxpayers out to bail out Wall Street." The debated debate. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "I understand how important this debate is and I'm very hopeful, but I also had to put the country first." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "My strong sense is that the best thing that I can do, rather than to inject presidential politics into some delicate negotiations, is to go down to Mississippi." And the sidelined president. Pres. George Bush said, "The proposal is a big proposal. And the reason it's big and substantial is because we've got a big problem." Was anybody a winner this week? Sec. of the Treasury Henry Paulson said, "I'm frustrated. The taxpayer is on the hook. The taxpayer is already on the hook. McCain-Palin pushes. Obama-Biden pushes back. Plus markets in turmoil and warfare seven years after 9/11, tonight on "Washington Week." Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "Change is coming and real change is coming to Washington, D.C." Sen. Joe Biden (D-DE) said, "John must have been the last guy in American politics to know this is about change." Gov. Sarah Palin (R-AK) said, "It's going to be a hard fought contest also, but John McCain and I - we are ready and with your help, we are going to win." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "I love this country too much to let them take over another election with lies and phony outrage and swift-boat politics. Enough is enough." Energy, outrage, engagement, and some downright silliness. Sen. Obama said, "Lipstick on a pig." Sen. McCain said, "Lipstick on a pig." While the candidates squabbled, the mortgage crisis spreads. Sec. Henry Paulson said, "It is necessary to take action." And the Pentagon said U.S. troops would start leaving Iraq but head to Afghanistan. Adm. Mike Mullen said, "I'm not convinced we're winning it in Afghanistan. I am convinced we can." We look at what's really at stake this election year with the reporters covering the week: John Dickerson of Slate magazine, Karen Tumulty of Time magazine, Jackie Calmes of the New York Times, and Martha Raddatz of ABC News.

An unemployment epidemic in the Middle East: what does it mean for America? NOW travels to Jordan to explore the implications of - and possible solutions to - having millions of young people out of work in the Middle East. Staggering unemployment rates among the region's massive youth population is fueling anger, frustration and resentment. To combat the problem, Jordan's Queen Rania has made job creation a top priority. Another initiative comes from an unlikely source: a Brooklyn, New York businessman who has set up programs across the region to give young people the real world skills they desperately need to gain employment. Both have their work cut out for them: nearly 70 million jobs are needed in the Middle East by the year 2020, according to the World Bank. Granted unprecedented access to Japan's "West Point" - the National Defense Academy - WIDE ANGLE captures a remarkable view of the military's shifting role in post-war Japanese society. Since WWII, Japan's pacifist constitution has mandated a strictly defensive force. But the line between defense and offense has blurred, and Japan's military budget is now the fifth largest in the world. With troops in Iraq and sophisticated new fighter jets, Japan is reconsidering its rules of engagement. This program follows Academy cadets preparing for possible overseas deployment and meets a group of peace demonstrators - including atom bomb survivors - on a two-month march dedicated to keeping Japan's troops at home.

With Barack Obama officially nominated as the Democrat's Presidential nominee, is it time to re-think affirmative action? This week, NOW on PBS looks at some state ballot measures that would eliminate race or gender considerations in public hiring, contracting and education programs. The controversial initiatives are being spearheaded by Ward Connerly, a long-time affirmative action opponent who some are accusing of ballot fraud. "I think that in some quarters, many parts of the country, a white male is really disadvantaged," Connerly, who considers himself multi-racial, tells NOW. "Because we have developed this notion of women and minorities being so disadvantaged and we have to help them, that we have, in many cases, twisted the thing so that it's no longer a case of equal opportunity. It's a case of putting a fist on the scale."

NOVA presents a minute-by-minute eyewitness account of the Hurricane Katrina disaster, exploring why the flood defenses and disaster relief planning failed to match Katrina's fury. What made this storm so deadly? How accurately did scientists predict its impact? And why are powerful hurricanes like Katrina likely to strike more often? The program will investigate the immense challenges posed by rebuilding New Orleans, and why - despite all the knowledge of the peril faced by its citizens - the city was so tragically unprepared when the long-feared disaster finally struck.

The author of "The Political Brain," talks to NOW's David Brancaccio about how appealing to voters' emotions reaps bigger electoral rewards than hammering home policy proposals. Westen is a Professor of Psychology at Emory University and the founder of Westen Strategies, LLC, a political and corporate consulting firm. Also, are evangelicals ready to bolt from the Republican Party? The Republican Party has long used wedge issues like abortion, gun control, and gay rights to its advantage in rallying conservative voters, but a shifting agenda amongst political evangelicals might be changing the game. David Brancaccio discusses these issues and their implications with Bishop Harry Jackson, Jr. Bishop Jackson, an influential voice among the nation's 60 million evangelicals, has shown a willingness to open his mind to opposing views, especially on climate change.

In a provocative report from the frontiers of biology, NOVA explores new findings that call into question the long-held belief that all inherited traits are passed on by our genes. The fast-growing field of epigenetics investigates hidden influences that could affect not only our health today but that of our descendants far into the future. It now seems that our environment makes small chemical changes to our DNA without affecting the gene's overall makeup. To put it another way, epigenetics adds to our DNA another layer that acts as a control system of "switches." Experiential factors such as nutrition or stress may trigger these switches and turn genes on or off. These subtle changes can then be "remembered" and passed on from generation to generation, altering inherited traits. This means the lives of our grandparents - the air they breathed, the food they ate, even the things they saw - could have directly affected us, and that what we do could, in turn, affect our grandchildren. NOVA explores this fascinating new idea, interviewing top scientists in the field and following what could be a paradigm shift in the way we think about inheritance and genes.

In 2006, Congress authorized the Secure Fence Act - a multi-billion dollar plan to build hundreds of miles of fencing along the southern border of the United States to stem the flow of undocumented immigrants and provide security from potential terrorism. But what was built to fight illegal immigration has turned into a nightmare for many Americans living along the U.S.-Mexico border. The fence, which will cover less than half of the actual border, inexplicably cuts through the middle of some properties, while leaving others untouched. Many question if it can keep people from sneaking in at all. This week, NOW senior correspondent Maria Hinojosa travels to Texas to meet border families who fear losing their property, their safety, and their way of life. We also follow an investigative reporter who questions whether certain landowners are getting preferential treatment. Is America's border fence working, or an utter waste?

In 1997, U.S. Marines patrolling the Texas-Mexico border as part of the War on Drugs shot and killed Esequiel Hernández Jr. Mistaken for a drug runner, the 18-year-old was, in fact, a U.S. citizen tending his family's goats with a .22 rifle. He became the first American killed by U.S. military forces on native soil since the 1970 Kent State shootings. Narrated by Tommy Lee Jones, the film explores Hernández's death and its torturous aftermath. His parents and friends, the Marines on patrol and investigators discuss the death of one young man and the dangers of militarizing the border.

When Ronald Reagan's first term reached its halfway point, he was challenged with tremendous economic strife, the recession and unemployment had battered Reaganomics. As the Pentagon spent $34 million per hour on building up U.S. military forces and nuclear weapons, the deficit increased. However, an economic transformation in 1983 and the slow return of Americans to work secured a second term for Reagan -- a term that would afford him his greatest triumphs and his most difficult blows. "The American Experience" chronicles Reagan's last four years in office -- from the loss of his closest advisors and the Iran-Contra scandal, to the dawning of the fall of Communism in Europe.

"You Ain't Heard Nothin' Yet (1923-1935)": Episode one introduces the four Youngstown, Ohio, brothers (Harry, Albert, Sam and Jack L. Warner) who officially incorporated their new motion picture company on April 4, 1923. Rin Tin Tin may have put them on the map, but soon gave way to a unique hard-boiled, hard-times cinema ethos. Tough guys James Cagney and Edward G. Robinson dominated the new gangster genre, tough dame Barbara Stanwyck headlined racy melodramas and even the chorus kids in the dazzling musicals were one bad break away from the streets. Key interviews: Busby Berkeley, Edward G. Robinson, Alfred Hitchcock and William Wellman. Key films: "The Jazz Singer," "Public Enemy," "42nd Street," "Baby Face" and "Little Caesar." "Good War, Uneasy Peace (1935-1950)": Warner Bros. becomes home to celebrated stars Bette Davis, Humphrey Bogart, Errol Flynn and more. The studio - like the world - faces the twin catastrophes of the Depression and World War II. Warner answers with films that reflect a deep and defiant belief in the courage of common people. McCain-Palin pushes. Obama-Biden pushes back. Plus markets in turmoil and warfare seven years after 9/11, tonight on "Washington Week." Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) said, "Change is coming and real change is coming to Washington, D.C." Sen. Joe Biden (D-DE) said, "John must have been the last guy in American politics to know this is about change." Gov. Sarah Palin (R-AK) said, "It's going to be a hard fought contest also, but John McCain and I - we are ready and with your help, we are going to win." Sen. Barack Obama (D-IL) said, "I love this country too much to let them take over another election with lies and phony outrage and swift-boat politics. Enough is enough." Energy, outrage, engagement, and some downright silliness. Sen. Obama said, "Lipstick on a pig." Sen. McCain said, "Lipstick on a pig." While the candidates squabbled, the mortgage crisis spreads. Sec. Henry Paulson said, "It is necessary to take action." And the Pentagon said U.S. troops would start leaving Iraq but head to Afghanistan. Adm. Mike Mullen said, "I'm not convinced we're winning it in Afghanistan. I am convinced we can." We look at what's really at stake this election year with the reporters covering the week: John Dickerson of Slate magazine, Karen Tumulty of Time magazine, Jackie Calmes of the New York Times, and Martha Raddatz of ABC News.
