Also, a man was caught urinating into the open reservoir, forcing the city to drain 38 million gallons of drinking water. Years ago, the city council adopted a plan to take the open reservoirs offline by December 31st of 2015. The existing reservoir pipes will be disconnected and new ones will be built to reroute the drinking water through the system at a cost of 4.8 million dollars. Teachers say kids are under an enormous amount of pressure to perform well on state tests. And in many districts, teacher's salaries depend on how well their students perform. A FOX 12 political analyst said he’s not surprised about the petition, but that it’s going to take some time, especially with what it says in the Oregon Constitution that you can only recall someone who’s in office for six months, although the Governor has been in for more than 12 years.

The ban would include e-cigarettes and vaporizers. More than 500 other U.S. cities currently have smoke free parks. Many people welcome the ban, but some think it is unfair since a park is an open area and people should be free to do whatever they like. The City Commissioners will start discussing the park tobacco plan this week.

Surveillance video from a shooting in a parking garage was shown in hopes that someone will recognize the subject with a gun. This was one of 16 gang-related violent crimes Portland police responded to this year, all shootings, including six in just the first ten days of February. Portland residents we spoke with said they feel safe, but this much violence is upsetting. Meanwhile, Crimestoppers is offering a new reward to get guns away from felons and kids. ENVIRONMENT/SAFETY ISSUES

This story focused on a new earthquake alert system that could help save lives. Earthquakes can hit without notice. But at University of Washington, the Pacific Northwest Seismic Network is testing out a new program called “Shakealert” that detects earthquakes before they hit, in some cases up to ten to twenty seconds before. That gives people time to find a safe spot, put away valuables or even turn off electricity to avoid fires. Sensors from seismographs pick up the first wave from an earthquake and then send that information to a computer. A few companies from the Northwest are already part of the trial. Providence Hospital and Microsoft already have computers set up to get the alert. There is still a lot more research that needs to be done and researchers don’t know when the technology will be fully implemented but are hoping they will eventually be able to send out warnings to your cell phone.

CONSUMER/ECONOMY ISSUES

This story focused on the opening of nearly 30 ports on the West Coast, including Portland, after shipping companies and dock workers reached an agreement late Friday night. And even though it will take days to unload the backlog, the Port's major player will not return when it leaves in March. All the ports are resuming normal operation, averting a shutdown that could have cost the U.S. economy two billion dollars a day. This, after shipping companies and the union representing dock workers reached a tentative agreement over the weekend on a five year labor deal. Members of the union must still ratify the contract which is expected to happen in the coming days. Despite the resolution, analysts said it will take months for workers to clear the backlog of goods that have sat idle in containers at the ports. That's a problem for business owners who have seen their profits take a nose-dive and their costs increase since the dispute began.

That means no one could "vape" in any workplace where smoking is not allowed. Multnomah County Commissioners will vote on a similar proposal in a few days. The Vice President of the Multnomah County Vaping Association said they support the regulations and most shops already ban sales to minors. But they were demonstrating outside the County Building to ask commissioners to exempt "Vape Shops" from the Smoke Free Workplace Law where they say customers go to sample and learn to use products. EDUCATION/ECONOMY ISSUES

This story focused on a proposed budget cut that would take 4 million dollars from the Beaverton School District alone. That's equal to salaries for 41 teachers. Instead of just hoping that legislators will approve a healthy budget, the principal of one local high school sent home a form letter to families urging them to send it to their state senator or representative. Students are doing the same on social media, all to tell lawmakers they need adequate funding. The budget on the table right now would mean 4.1 million dollars less for Beaverton schools, so students started a Twitter campaign, showing they were willing to speak up after realizing their own future was at stake. EDUCATION/FAMILY ISSUES

This story focused on a new technology being used to help special education students communicate and learn. It's called "Eagle Eye" and used electronics attached to the face to track eye movement that gets translated onto a computer screen. The parents of one 12-yr-old girl said their daughter really blossomed after using it at school. They said it helps her learn things that would otherwise be much more difficult. The program was developed by grad students as a fun way to pass time. It's now used in several schools around the country after seeing the positive effect it has on special needs kids.

Air Date: 3/24/15 Good Day Oregon, Running Time:3:33

CRIME/GOVERNMENT/SAFETY ISSUES

This story focused on lawmakers who are trying to stop the growing problem of the dangerous and highly flammable hash oil. Last year alone, at least ten people in Oregon ended up in Legacy Emanuel's Burn Unit. Although it is mostly the guys cooking the oil that get badly burned, one child suffered broken bones after escaping a butane hash oil explosion and one 87-year-old woman died when she was forced to jump for safety after another explosion. Hash oil is a highly concentrated form of Marijuana. In Oregon, many cooking up hash oil have medical marijuana cards and despite the dangerous explosions, most have faced only minor charges. Lawmakers are looking at revising Oregon's Arson Law so that hash oil manufacturers would face first or second degree arson charges. In some cases, this would be a Measure 11 crime and those convicted could face serious prison time.

CONSUMER/HEALTH ISSUES

This story focused on a recall on frozen meals from “Amy’s Kitchen”. The company said 74 thousand cases of its frozen foods that include spinach may be contaminated with Listeria. The recall is voluntary and no illnesses have been reported.

Air Date: 3/30/14 10PM, Running Time:2:30

GOVERNMENT/SOCIO-POLITICAL ISSUES

This story focused on a ban by Portland’s Mayor on government travel to Indiana on the heels of a new controversial law. The Mayor says he hopes to send a message to Indiana Lawmakers by not sending any Portland City Workers to the state anytime soon. Critics of the new Religious Freedom Restoration Act said the legislation will lead to discrimination against the Gay and Lesbian Community. Local LBGTQ Organizations have been closely following the new law. The Governor of Indiana and other lawmakers said the bill is to make sure businesses aren’t forced to do something that goes against their owner’s religious beliefs.
