The Taylorville City Council met Monday evening and appointed a new police chief, but the fireworks came early this week as discussions about a sidewalk stole the main stage of the meeting. Judge Brad T. Paisley swore in new Police Chief Dwayne Wheeler in front of most of his peers and companions. Wheeler promised unity saying, “We are all in this together” to a cheering room that gave a standing ovation for the new Chief.

The discussion got a little heated with remarks from Steve Millings, a general contractor, who was very upset after a recommendation to the city council to replace the curbs and sidewalks along the parking lot at West Main Cross, Webster, and Market Streets was tabled. Millings was upset, because he had already started on the project.

MILLINGS1

The recommendation had been tabled by Ernie Dorchinecz who defended his actions by stating that he needed more time because he had been given conflicting and different answers than Taylorville Mayor Bruce Barry had received. After much debate and Mr. Millings showing the aldermen the actual contract he had had signed, the motion had already been tabled so nothing could be done about it till the next City Council Committee meeting.

Other actions that happened at Monday’s meeting included Taylorville naming July 1st Ella Hohenstein day for her contributions in music and theater and approving a busines development district committee. Mayor Barry also informed the aldermen that there are a lot of sewer issues.

The Taylorville School Board met Monday evening and discussed personnel moves, Stonington Park District, and some needs for the school. Some announcements from President of the Board Stephen Turner included cleaning up mold from one of the junior high rooms that will be used by the children in case of inclement weather. This has already been done. A new oven and room heaters for the junior high as well will need to be ordered. There is also discussion about possibly adding more bleachers to the football field as well. The big new business is Stonington Park District. President Turner presented the options with option A being that the land would be split from the building and option B which was a little more favorable to the board and that would be for the board to extend the closing date but they would take over paying for the utilities.
