America's aging baby boomers are headed for a shock as they near retirement. In addition to Social Security, the pillars of retirement income for Americans have been either lifetime corporate pensions or employee-contribution plans such as 401Ks. But both retirement strategies are in trouble. Buffeted by pension cuts, corporate bankruptcies, and the 2001-2002 stock market crash, most boomers now expect to be working into their retirement years.

With 35 million people in America now age sixty-five and older, "the old old"-those over 85-are now considered the fastest growing segment of the U.S. population. While medical advances have enabled an unprecedented number of Americans to live longer and healthier lives, this new longevity has also had unintended consequences. For millions of Americans, living longer also means serious chronic illness and a protracted physical decline that can require an immense amount of care, often for years and sometimes even decades. Yet just as the need for care is rising, the number of available caregivers is dwindling. With families more dispersed than ever and a healthcare system overburdened, many experts fear that we are on the threshold of a major crisis in care.

The flaming explosion of the Hindenburg over Lakehurst, New Jersey in 1937 is one of the most famous disasters of the 20th century. It took more than 100 years to develop what was, in its day, the fastest, most technologically advanced and most luxurious form of transportation in the world. It took only 34 seconds to destroy it. The accident that put an end to the golden age of airships is widely believed to have been caused by the ignition of hydrogen gas used for lift. But Addison Bain, a retired NASA scientist, was not satisfied with that explanation. A hydrogen specialist who believed that it is the clean and safe fuel of the future, he set out on a personal quest of theorizing and experimentation to prove that the Hindenburg's real flaw was only skin deep.

In June 1900, Major Walter Reed, Chief Surgeon of the U.S. Army, led a medical team to Cuba on a mission to investigate yellow fever. For more than 200 years, the disease had terrorized the United States, killing an estimated 100,000 people in the 19th century alone. Shortly after Reed and his team arrived in Havana, they began testing the radical theories of Carlos Finlay, a Cuban doctor who believed that mosquitoes spread yellow fever. This program documents the heroic efforts of Reed's medical team, some of whom put their own lives on the line to verify Finlay's theory. When yellow fever struck New Orleans in 1905, an aggressive mosquito eradication campaign successfully ended the epidemic. It was the last yellow fever outbreak in the United States and the first major public health triumph of the 20th century.

What is the one principle, belief, or cause for which you would sacrifice everything - including your life? Ethical, spiritual, and ideological values that are central to the human experience find their voice in the documentary film, Last Best Hope, an intimate, riveting, little-known story about the ordinary men and women in the Belgian Resistance and their extraordinary acts to save and repatriate downed Allied airmen during the Second World War. At the heart of the story is 85-year old American Bill Grosvenor, a P-47 Thunderbolt pilot who fell from the skies over Belgium and into the hands of the Resistance in 1943. Nearly sixty years later, Grosvenor is reunited with his helpers in Belgium who fought against tyranny and oppression in their homes, in their neighborhoods, and in the streets of Brussels. Resistance fighters share for the first time their daring and heartrending stories, allowing Last Best Hope to explore the myriad motivations that propel one stranger to help another, despite the risk to his or her own life and everything dear. As unexpectedly as the Gestapo snared Grosvenor in an early morning safehouse raid, Last Best Hope transports the viewer to another place and time with a universal message about faith, hope, and the undefeatable power of the human spirit. Stunning and cathartic, Last Best Hope takes even the most jaded WWII film buff by surprise.

The story of Jesse James remains one of America's most cherished myths and one of its most wrong-headed. Jesse James, so the legend goes, was a Western outlaw, though, in fact, he never went west; America's own Robin Hood, though he robbed from the poor as well as the rich, and kept it all for himself; and a gunfighter whose victims, in reality, were almost always unarmed. Less heroic than brutal, James was in fact a product, from first to last, of the American Civil War; a Confederate partisan of expansive ambition, unbending politics and surprising cunning, who gladly helped invent his own valiant legend. A member of a vicious band of Missouri guerrillas during the war, James sought redemption afterwards. But as this AMERICAN EXPERIENCE production reveals, year by year, he rode further from it, redeeming instead the great and glorious memory of the Old South. In a life steeped in prolific violence and bloodshed, he met what was perhaps the most fitting end; like so many of his own victims, James himself was an unarmed man, shot in the back.

In 1926, just a few months before her death, Will Rogers described Annie Oakley as "the greatest woman rifle shot the world has ever produced." As the star attraction of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, she thrilled audiences around the world with her daring shooting feats and her act helped fuel turn-of-the-century nostalgia for the vanished, mythical world of the American West. Over time she became an American legend-the loud, brassy, cocksure shooter celebrated in the musical "Annie Get Your Gun." But that legend had little to do with the real Annie Oakley. Although famous as a Western sharpshooter, Oakley lived her entire life east of the Mississippi. A champion in a man's sport, she forever changed ideas about the abilities of women, yet she opposed female suffrage. Her fame and fortune came from her skill with guns, yet she was a Quaker. This probing AMERICAN EXPERIENCE production examines the dramatic life of a uniquely American icon whose complex character manifested many of the paradoxes of the nation.

At the end of 1853, San Francisco was a city on the fast track. It had twelve daily newspapers, nine insurance companies, consulates of twenty-seven foreign governments, and six-story buildings where sand dunes once stood. A few years earlier, the seaside town had been a sleepy village of just 800 people. But the sight of gold in the rushing waters of the American River sent a ripple around the world and set the stage for an event that would forever change a city, a fledgling state, and the nation. "The Gold Rush transformed California, but more importantly, it transformed America," says historian J.S. Holliday. "Next to the Civil War in the nineteenth century, no other event had a greater impact, more long-lasting reverberations than the Gold Rush." On Monday, November 6, American Experience presents The Gold Rush. From producer/director Randall MacLowry (Stephen Foster, A Brilliant Madness) and writer Michelle Ferrari (Las Vegas: An Unconventional History, Seabiscuit, Miss America, New Orleans), this new documentary features interviews with acclaimed writer Isabel Allende, and noted historians James Rawls, Kevin Starr, and Richard White, among others. Incorporating rare and exquisite daguerreotypes and original recreations, this film offers a vivid new portrait of a seminal event in America's history.

Chaco Canyon, located in northwest New Mexico, is perhaps the only site in the world constructed in an elaborate pattern that mirrors the yearly cycle of the sun and the 19-year cycle of the moon. How did an ancient civilization, with no known written language, arrange its buildings into a virtual celestial calendar, spanning an area roughly the size of Ireland? Why did this society, ancestors of today's Pueblo Indians, choose to establish the center of their world in the middle of such an arid, barren land? And why, after constructing buildings the size of the Roman Coliseum, did these same people deliberately seal them and abruptly leave? These enigmas have puzzled archaeologists for centuries. This program presents substantial evidence that the Chacoan people expressed a complex solar and lunar cosmology in their magnificent architecture. The discoveries documented in the film have transformed scientific understanding of this site -- one of the most elaborate and mysterious of ancient Native-American ruins -- and are revolutionizing perceptions of the Chacoan civilization. Robert Redford narrates.

In 1941, the world was at war and the Allies were desperate to slow the tide of Nazi domination. The Germans needed 100 gallons of water to make one ton of steel. Barnes Wallis, a British aircraft designer, set out to develop a unique weapon that would detonate dams -- a bomb that could skip across water, cling to its target and explode at a specific depth to deliver its coup de grace. This program investigates the urgent rush to create, test and deploy the new bomb, and the efforts to train an elite squadron of pilots for the unusually dangerous low-level night flights to drop it far inside enemy lines. Using archival footage, modern tests of the original principles and equipment, and interviews with experts, participants in the raids and their surviving relatives, the program provides insight into the ingenuity of the man who built the bomb under incredible pressure, as well as the dedication and bravery of the airmen from Britain, Canada, America, Australia and New Zealand who risked (and lost) their lives in one of the most daring missions of WWII.

In the summer of 1942, two ace fighter pilots -- one American and one Japanese -- faced off during a dramatic dogfight in the skies over Guadalcanal. Eventually the Japanese pilot shot down the American, who crash landed behind enemy lines but managed to escape before being captured. Using both pilots' comprehensive (but sometimes contradictory) memoirs, and following a forensic expedition to the recently-found American plane, "Dogfight Over Guadalcanal" examines and recreates every anxious second of the WWII showdown over the Pacific, revealing just how evenly matched the two men were and how they both survived, despite serious injuries.

With the development of the airplane propeller, the Wright brothers launched a revolution that continues a century later. Wilbur and Orville may have hoped their Wright Flyer would put an end to warfare, but instead, in just a few short years, the airplane became a key tool in military combat. The pace of technological change was fast and furious as the airplane quickly evolved from a reconnaissance tool, to an artillery spotter, to a bomber, to a fighter. As its utility expanded, the airplane redefined warfare in the 20th century.

This era of aviation history saw a number of major developments: an increased understanding of aerodynamics that allowed engineers to build planes that could fly faster and farther; the invention of radar, which enabled defensive forces to detect approaching aircraft; the rise of the fighter ace pilots; and improved bomb delivery systems. This last development may have had the most destructive and terrifying effects, giving rise to the Blitz over London, the firebombing of Germany, and the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The first hour covers the period 1946-1990. The jet engine was one of the most defining pieces of mid-20th-century technology. It led to revolutionary change in aerial combat and in the military role of the airplane. The second hour covers the period 1955-present. Throughout the last century, covert surveillance has been key to military success. But as defenses against airplanes improved through the decades, the airplanes themselves have undergone a transformation of design. Missed opportunities, a vital arms race and the secrets hidden among the spoils of war come vividly to life in the third program of WARPLANE. In the latter days of World War II, Britain and Germany feverishly advanced early dreams of a jet airplane, a defining piece of mid- 20th-century technology that would revolutionize existing airplane roles and create an entirely new generation of mission-specific machines. With the world in the grip of the Cold War, combat planes became faster and more agile, spy planes cruised over enemy territory at dizzying heights and dazzling speeds, and jet-powered helicopters entered military service. Designers, test pilots and combat crews took huge risks as they pushed the technological envelope, and within 58 years of Orville Wright's historic flight at Kitty Hawk, man had broken through the boundaries of both sound and space.

Over the trenches of World War I, the "eye in the sky" had been indispensable. Since that time, developers have worked endlessly to make planes harder to spot and shoot down. Speed worked at first, then the ability to fly high, but each advance was eventually met by a counter-advance that all but neutralized it. Until, that is, the birth of the computer. With the computer age came avionics - systems to control planes that humans could never fly. These systems, combined with new materials, designs and paints, as well as the unwavering commitment and singular vision of men like Skunk Works' Ben Rich, gave rise to the most recent revolution in military aviation - stealth planes that are all but invisible to enemy eyes. Like the jet engine before it, stealth technology has transformed warfare, and together with ever-advanced precision ordnance and purely autonomous planes, has positioned the world's most advanced air forces for a future here in-cockpit pilots may no longer be necessary.

In "A Seat at the Drum," journalist Mark Anthony Rolo (Bad River Ojibwe) seeks to learn how Native Americans in Los Angeles preserve a tribal identity, survive economically and cope with the pressures of assimilation in a challenging metropolis. His personal quest to come to terms with these issues leads him to meet Native community leaders, Indians relocated from reservations, boarding school students, Native business leaders and single parent families whose stories typify the experiences of urban Indians. As these characters tell how Indians in Los Angeles create community and retain a connection to their tribes; choose whether their language and traditions are relevant in the modern world; cope with mounting social problems and declining social services; and develop business empires fueled by gaming profits, Rolo is propelled toward a reckoning with his own identity. Rolo finds that though relocated Indians seem to lose their tribal identity, indigenous California tribes such as the Gabrieleno/Tongva and the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians strive to strengthen theirs. Original inhabitants of the LA Basin, the Gabrieleno/Tongva tribe grasp threads of their original birdsongs, traditional ways and history in an idealistic attempt to gain Federal recognition, and with that, the golden road that the Pechanga have achieved. The Pechanga, a dwindling band before the National Indian Gaming Act was passed, are now so prosperous that Governor Schwarzenegger looks to them and other gaming tribes to help bail out California debt. But what makes them Indian? Is a Federal I.D. number enough? Do the wealthy Indians bear responsibility for philanthropy toward the poor?

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

Born McKinley Morganfield in rural Mississippi, Muddy Waters literally electrified the local blues sound, took it to Chicago and became the undisputed King of the Blues. His story is both iconic and idiosyncratic -- a field hand, a bootlegger and a sometimes musician, he personifies the 20th-century African American migration from the rural south to the urban north. Songs like "Hoochie Coochie Man," "I Just Wanna Make Love to You," "Still a Fool" and "Rolling Stone" speak for both a people and an era -- "Rolling Stone" inspired a band and a magazine. Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin and Eric Clapton, among others, kept Muddy in the popular pantheon, openly embracing the elements that Muddy exemplified -- an unflinching honesty and an insistence on deep emotion in music.

In the mid-1850s, thousands of Latter-day Saint emigrants crowded the docks of Liverpool, dreaming of a new life in the Salt Lake Valley. After an arduous ocean voyage and an overland trip to Iowa, they loaded their belongings into handcarts, which they then began pulling the nearly 1,300 miles to the Salt Lake Valley. But for the Willie and Martin companies, numerous delays in an already late start led to a near-catastrophe, as the emigrants found themselves running out of provisions and stranded in treacherous snowstorms on the high plains of Wyoming. This is the story of those who were stranded and those who came to their rescue in one of the greatest acts of heroism of the 19th century.

Born McKinley Morganfield in rural Mississippi, Muddy Waters literally electrified the local blues sound, took it to Chicago and became the undisputed King of the Blues. His story is both iconic and idiosyncratic -- a field hand, a bootlegger and a sometimes musician, he personifies the 20th-century African American migration from the rural south to the urban north. Songs like "Hoochie Coochie Man," "I Just Wanna Make Love to You," "Still a Fool" and "Rolling Stone" speak for both a people and an era -- "Rolling Stone" inspired a band and a magazine. Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin and Eric Clapton, among others, kept Muddy in the popular pantheon, openly embracing the elements that Muddy exemplified -- an unflinching honesty and an insistence on deep emotion in music.

On November 25, 2002, Congress established the Department of Homeland Security. That same day, it created billions of dollars in government spending. That money soon flowed into the hands of private corporations charged with creating systems and technology to make the country safer. A newspaper famed for its investigative reporting -- THE WASHINGTON POST -- has been following that money.

Bill Gates and Warren Buffett, the two richest men in America, are close friends. Though a generation apart in age and founders of two very different businesses, the two have deep admiration and affection for each other. They also share a common sense of responsibility to aggressively use their wealth to improve the world. Gates favors health, while Buffett focuses on nuclear disarmament. Occasionally, they get together with members of the next generation of business leaders to answer their questions. On September 30, the two men spent the day at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, where they filled the Lied Center with students and faculty from the College of Business Administration. This high-definition program captures the energy, intelligence and humor of the event.

In "A Seat at the Drum," journalist Mark Anthony Rolo (Bad River Ojibwe) seeks to learn how Native Americans in Los Angeles preserve a tribal identity, survive economically and cope with the pressures of assimilation in a challenging metropolis. His personal quest to come to terms with these issues leads him to meet Native community leaders, Indians relocated from reservations, boarding school students, Native business leaders and single parent families whose stories typify the experiences of urban Indians. As these characters tell how Indians in Los Angeles create community and retain a connection to their tribes; choose whether their language and traditions are relevant in the modern world; cope with mounting social problems and declining social services; and develop business empires fueled by gaming profits, Rolo is propelled toward a reckoning with his own identity. Rolo finds that though relocated Indians seem to lose their tribal identity, indigenous California tribes such as the Gabrieleno/Tongva and the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians strive to strengthen theirs. Original inhabitants of the LA Basin, the Gabrieleno/Tongva tribe grasp threads of their original birdsongs, traditional ways and history in an idealistic attempt to gain Federal recognition, and with that, the golden road that the Pechanga have achieved. The Pechanga, a dwindling band before the National Indian Gaming Act was passed, are now so prosperous that Governor Schwarzenegger looks to them and other gaming tribes to help bail out California debt. But what makes them Indian? Is a Federal I.D. number enough? Do the wealthy Indians bear responsibility for philanthropy toward the poor?

The average American family today carries 10 credit cards. Credit card debt and personal bankruptcies are now at an all time high. With no legal limit on the amount of interest or fees that can be charged, credit cards have become the most profitable sector of the American banking industry: more than $30 billion in profits last year alone. FRONTLINE and the New York Times examine how the credit card industry became so pervasive, so lucrative and so politically powerful.

Public opinion polls unanimously show that trust in mainstream media—the institution most responsible for keeping us informed and aware—is at an all-time low. How did we get here, and more importantly, how can we repair the damage? This week, NOW poses those questions to legendary television producer and People for the American Way founder Norman Lear. We also talk to Martin Kaplan, associate dean of USC's Annenberg School of Communication. Is mainstream media serving public or corporate interests? Issues and answers from people who've spent their lives minding the media. This week on NOW.

While some businesses exercise their compassion muscles exclusively during the holiday season, others find ways to mix benevolence into their bottom lines throughout the year. This week, David Brancaccio talks to two influential executives who say that capitalism can actually make the world a better place, including substantially helping some of its poorest people. Before you put on your cynical hat, check out this week's show. Visit NOW Online to learn more about micro-lending, a simple banking concept that pays great dividends to people who have only hope to offer as collateral. Also online, Maria Hinojosa serves up a "NOW on the News" web audio interview with Sen. Jeff Bingaman, who is about to take over as the new chairman of the Energy and National Resources Committee.

Americans are swimming in a sea of messages. Each year, legions of ad people, copywriters, market researchers, pollsters, consultants, and even linguists - most of whom work for one of six giant companies - spend billions of dollars and millions of man-hours trying to determine how to persuade consumers what to buy, whom to trust, and what to think. Increasingly, these techniques are migrating to the high-stakes arena of politics, shaping policy and influencing how Americans choose their leaders. In "The Persuaders," FRONTLINE exposes the inner workings of the marketing and advertising industries, and the new and surprising methods they use to decipher who we are and what we want.

Separating a political campaign from the big money that feeds it (and the accompanying special interest that all too often corrupts it) seems like a quixotic endeavor at best. But don't tell that to a "cleanly-elected" politician in Arizona or Maine, or to Proposition 89 supporters in California. To them, the fight to make elections free, fair, and publicly funded is nothing short of a peoples' revolution in American politics. The more we investigated, the more obvious it became that we needed a full hour to cover the "Clean Election" movement and its ramifications on our democracy. And so, this Friday we present "Votes for Sale?" the story of a grass roots rebellion that is inspiring citizens coast to coast, but also creating a contentious debate about how far a candidate should be allowed to go to win your vote.

People earning the smallest paychecks in America often rely on that money to support their entire families. Six states will be voting to raise their minimum wage in the upcoming election. One of them is Missouri, where the topic has become a hot political issue. Meanwhile, Texas, home to more minimum wage workers than any other state, has no ballot initiative to raise the minimum wage, leaving workers with very desperate choices. These are the people who clean our clothes, our offices, and our hotel rooms, while most of us look the other way. How we treat them - and not just during election cycles - says a lot about our national character. In two separate reports, one on-air and one online, NOW looks at the impact of low wages on both politics and families, and what steps some are taking to fight for a "living wage".

On May 6, 2005, the residents of Spokane, Washington, awoke to one of the strangest headlines in the town's history: "West Tied to Sex Abuse in '70s, Using Office to Lure Young Men". The popular, socially conservative Republican mayor of Spokane, Jim West, had been outed by the town's newspaper The Spokesman-Review. The paper told the sordid story of a man with two lives: in public, he had once sponsored legislation forbidding gays from teaching in public schools, while in private, the paper alleged, he was trawling for young men online, using the trappings of his office to lure them into sexual relationships. But as bizarre as the revelations were, so too were the newspaper's methods. For months, a middle-aged "forensic computer specialist" had posed as an eighteen-year-old boy online, engaging the mayor in a relationship that became more and more intimate, ultimately exploding on the front page of the newspaper. With unfettered access to all the principal players, FRONTLINE explores how this story forced an all-American town to confront its most basic feelings about homosexuality and sheds new light on the confusing, often contradictory, experience of gay people themselves in a place far from the main battlefields of the culture wars.

Iraq. The word itself has transcended geography and now has a new definition: "problem." But how big a problem it is still depends on who you ask. With a crucial mid-term election days away, NOW put Iraq's "problem" status to the test by traveling to one of the most pro-military communities in the country. In Texas' 31st Congressional district, home to America's largest active army base, we take a penetrating and surprising look at the people and politics of President Bush's home state. On NOW Online (www.pbs.org/now), watch web-exclusive video reports about two Texas candidates, both veterans, both making the war the center of their campaigns, but each coming at it from a radically different point of view. Finally, no one could ever accuse journalist Andrew Sullivan of being shy with his opinions. In an insightful interview, he talks to David Brancaccio about what the mid-term elections will mean for Republicans now and in the future. Are they doomed? Andrew says yes...and no.

When's the last time we had an Election Night that actually ended on Election Night? That's certainly not the only question people came away with after the dust finally settled to reveal that Democrats had seized control of both houses of Congress. In this week's show we're tackling some of those questions with the help of Salon.com editor-in-chief Joan Walsh. At the same time, we're taking a look back at the issues and people featured in our pre-election coverage to see if those political and personal stories had happy or sad endings (hint: both). On NOW Online (www.pbs.org/now), check out how hot-button ballot initiatives fared around the country, with a generous helping of NOW insight. And take our online poll to let us know if you think President Bush and Nancy Pelosi can play nice.

America's aging baby boomers are headed for a shock as they near retirement. In addition to Social Security, the pillars of retirement income for Americans have been either lifetime corporate pensions or employee-contribution plans such as 401ks. But both retirement corporate strategies are in trouble. Buffeted by pension cuts, corporate bankruptcies, and the 2001-2002 stock market crash, most boomers now expect to be working into their retirement years.

The average American family today carries 10 credit cards. Credit card debt and personal bankruptcies are now at an all time high. With no legal limit on the amount of interest or fees that can be charged, credit cards have become the most profitable sector of the American banking industry: more than $30 billion in profits last year alone. FRONTLINE and the New York Times examine how the credit card industry became so pervasive, so lucrative and so politically powerful.

Americans are swimming in a sea of messages. Each year, legions of ad people, copywriters, market researchers, pollsters, consultants, and even linguists - most of whom work for one of six giant companies - spend billions of dollars and millions of man-hours trying to determine how to persuade consumers what to buy, whom to trust, and what to think. Increasingly, these techniques are migrating to the high-stakes arena of politics, shaping policy and influencing how Americans choose their leaders. In "The Persuaders," FRONTLINE exposes the inner workings of the marketing and advertising industries, and the new and surprising methods they use to decipher who we are and what we want.

Two reporters for the LOS ANGELES TIMES, Scott Glover and Matt Lait, dig deep into the L.A.P.D.'s suspect record of policing itself, discovering sanitized official reports of police shootings and the revelation that a small number of officers tended to be repeat shooters. In 2004, their years of reporting were featured in two extensive front-page stories that humanized statistics and in some cases spoke for victims who did not live to see justice.

A report of an extraordinary political scandal. The scale of corruption still coming to light dwarfs anything since Watergate. In one sense it's the age-old tale of greed, but greed encouraged now by the way our system works. Deep in the plea bargains of Jack Abramoff and his cronies is the admission that they conspired to use campaign contributions to bribe politicians; campaign finance is the core of the corruption. They took great pains to cover their tracks and they might have pulled it off except for a handful of honest people, and the work of some enterprising print reporters, Senate investigators, and the ethics team at the Department of Justice. Following the money in this story leads us through a bizarre maze of cocktail parties, golf courses, private jets, four-star restaurants, sweatshops and the chandeliered rooms frequented by the high and mighty in Washington. Stay with the twists and turns and the pieces fall into place. But keep in mind that what you're seeing is only a partial picture; we have not seen the end of Capitol crimes.

The story of Jesse James remains one of America's most cherished myths and one of its most wrong-headed. Jesse James, so the legend goes, was a Western outlaw, though, in fact, he never went west; America's own Robin Hood, though he robbed from the poor as well as the rich, and kept it all for himself; and a gunfighter whose victims, in reality, were almost always unarmed. Less heroic than brutal, James was in fact a product, from first to last, of the American Civil War; a Confederate partisan of expansive ambition, unbending politics and surprising cunning, who gladly helped invent his own valiant legend. A member of a vicious band of Missouri guerrillas during the war, James sought redemption afterwards. But as this AMERICAN EXPERIENCE production reveals, year by year, he rode further from it, redeeming instead the great and glorious memory of the Old South. In a life steeped in prolific violence and bloodshed, he met what was perhaps the most fitting end; like so many of his own victims, James himself was an unarmed man, shot in the back.

On May 6, 2005, the residents of Spokane, Washington, awoke to one of the strangest headlines in the town's history: "West Tied to Sex Abuse in '70s, Using Office to Lure Young Men". The popular, socially conservative Republican mayor of Spokane, Jim West, had been outed by the town's newspaper The Spokesman-Review. The paper told the sordid story of a man with two lives: in public, he had once sponsored legislation forbidding gays from teaching in public schools, while in private, the paper alleged, he was trawling for young men online, using the trappings of his office to lure them into sexual relationships. But as bizarre as the revelations were, so too were the newspaper's methods. For months, a middle-aged "forensic computer specialist" had posed as an eighteen-year-old boy online, engaging the mayor in a relationship that became more and more intimate, ultimately exploding on the front page of the newspaper. With unfettered access to all the principal players, FRONTLINE explores how this story forced an all-American town to confront its most basic feelings about homosexuality and sheds new light on the confusing, often contradictory, experience of gay people themselves in a place far from the main battlefields of the culture wars.

Few people ever meet a dwarf face-to-face. In this personal journey, documentary filmmaker Steve Delano shows firsthand how a genetic mutation marks a person for life. He reveals the isolation of his school years, his "ludicrous" strategies to fit in as well as the mixed blessings of dwarfism. In this film, Delano exercises the license of stature and his irreverent sense of humor to confront head-on conventional representations and misperceptions about dwarfs. From growing up a "freak" - a form of forced celebrity - to finally accepting and asserting his difference, Delano provides an idiosyncratic perspective based on a tip-toe life, and contemplates a future where genetic engineering may eliminate "people of difference" altogether.

In "A Seat at the Drum," journalist Mark Anthony Rolo (Bad River Ojibwe) seeks to learn how Native Americans in Los Angeles preserve a tribal identity, survive economically and cope with the pressures of assimilation in a challenging metropolis. His personal quest to come to terms with these issues leads him to meet Native community leaders, Indians relocated from reservations, boarding school students, Native business leaders and single parent families whose stories typify the experiences of urban Indians. As these characters tell how Indians in Los Angeles create community and retain a connection to their tribes; choose whether their language and traditions are relevant in the modern world; cope with mounting social problems and declining social services; and develop business empires fueled by gaming profits, Rolo is propelled toward a reckoning with his own identity. Rolo finds that though relocated Indians seem to lose their tribal identity, indigenous California tribes such as the Gabrieleno/Tongva and the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians strive to strengthen theirs. Original inhabitants of the LA Basin, the Gabrieleno/Tongva tribe grasp threads of their original birdsongs, traditional ways and history in an idealistic attempt to gain Federal recognition, and with that, the golden road that the Pechanga have achieved. The Pechanga, a dwindling band before the National Indian Gaming Act was passed, are now so prosperous that Governor Schwarzenegger looks to them and other gaming tribes to help bail out California debt. But what makes them Indian? Is a Federal I.D. number enough? Do the wealthy Indians bear responsibility for philanthropy toward the poor?

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

America's aging baby boomers are headed for a shock as they near retirement. In addition to Social Security, the pillars of retirement income for Americans have been either lifetime corporate pensions or employee-contribution plans such as 401Ks. But both retirement strategies are in trouble. Buffeted by pension cuts, corporate bankruptcies, and the 2001-2002 stock market crash, most boomers now expect to be working into their retirement years.

The average American family today carries 10 credit cards. Credit card debt and personal bankruptcies are now at an all time high. With no legal limit on the amount of interest or fees that can be charged, credit cards have become the most profitable sector of the American banking industry: more than $30 billion in profits last year alone. FRONTLINE and the New York Times examine how the credit card industry became so pervasive, so lucrative and so politically powerful.

While some businesses exercise their compassion muscles exclusively during the holiday season, others find ways to mix benevolence into their bottom lines throughout the year. This week, David Brancaccio talks to two influential executives who say that capitalism can actually make the world a better place, including substantially helping some of its poorest people. Before you put on your cynical hat, check out this week's show. Visit NOW Online to learn more about micro-lending, a simple banking concept that pays great dividends to people who have only hope to offer as collateral. Also online, Maria Hinojosa serves up a "NOW on the News" web audio interview with Sen. Jeff Bingaman, who is about to take over as the new chairman of the Energy and National Resources Committee.

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

People earning the smallest paychecks in America often rely on that money to support their entire families. Six states will be voting to raise their minimum wage in the upcoming election. One of them is Missouri, where the topic has become a hot political issue. Meanwhile, Texas, home to more minimum wage workers than any other state, has no ballot initiative to raise the minimum wage, leaving workers with very desperate choices. These are the people who clean our clothes, our offices, and our hotel rooms, while most of us look the other way. How we treat them - and not just during election cycles - says a lot about our national character. In two separate reports, one on-air and one online, NOW looks at the impact of low wages on both politics and families, and what steps some are taking to fight for a "living wage".

"Magnetic Storm"--On March 13, 1989, the lights went out all across Canada and the eastern seaboard of the United States as far south as New York. The most serious power grid failure in American history was caused by a magnetic storm in the earth's upper atmosphere, itself triggered by the eruption of a huge flare from the surface of the Sun. Unusual as this event may seem, many scientists today are beginning to worry that it may be a harbinger of things to come, and that changes to the planet's magnetic field could make earth ever more vulnerable to deadly radiation from space. This film explores one of the least-known but most serious threats to life on earth.

It is a visual wonderland, where imposing mountains rise almost two vertical miles above sprawling salt flats and canyons are painted in strokes of blue, pink, violet, and green from sunrise to sunset. This is Death Valley - one of the most inhospitable places on the planet. Nowhere else is a landscape so exquisite yet brutal, stunning yet harsh. Here, temperatures spike into the 130s, the earth cracks like broken clay, and when the hot wind blows, all you can taste is dust and salt. But, ironically, it is water that has shaped this super-arid home of true survivors.

In June 1900, Major Walter Reed, Chief Surgeon of the U.S. Army, led a medical team to Cuba on a mission to investigate yellow fever. For more than 200 years, the disease had terrorized the United States, killing an estimated 100,000 people in the 19th century alone. Shortly after Reed and his team arrived in Havana, they began testing the radical theories of Carlos Finlay, a Cuban doctor who believed that mosquitoes spread yellow fever. This program documents the heroic efforts of Reed's medical team, some of whom put their own lives on the line to verify Finlay's theory. When yellow fever struck New Orleans in 1905, an aggressive mosquito eradication campaign successfully ended the epidemic. It was the last yellow fever outbreak in the United States and the first major public health triumph of the 20th century.

"Magnetic Storm"--On March 13, 1989, the lights went out all across Canada and the eastern seaboard of the United States as far south as New York. The most serious power grid failure in American history was caused by a magnetic storm in the earth's upper atmosphere, itself triggered by the eruption of a huge flare from the surface of the Sun. Unusual as this event may seem, many scientists today are beginning to worry that it may be a harbinger of things to come, and that changes to the planet's magnetic field could make earth ever more vulnerable to deadly radiation from space. This film explores one of the least-known but most serious threats to life on earth.

For nearly a century, humans forgot their glorious past and huddled in a state of ignorance and fear. Scientists have uncovered evidence from around the world that indicates that the early Dark Ages may have been triggered by an actual event that occurred around 535 A.D. Science writer David Keys believes that the cause was a natural phenomenon of cataclysmic proportions. Determined to discover the exact nature of this catastrophe, and to understand its political, economic and social repercussions, he embarks on a scientific odyssey that ranges from Greenland to the Antarctica; from the Americas to the Far East. At the center of a stunningly-complex chain of events seems to be a loud bang (according to Keys this was a volcanic explosion equal to two thousand million Hiroshima size bombs.) The subsequent environmental calamity, he believes, affected human civilization from Mongolia to Constantinople, precipitating plague, famine, death, great migration, the fall of the great Mexican city of Teotihuacan, the Anglo-Saxon victory over the Celts, and may even have played a role in the rise of Islam.

Chaco Canyon, located in northwest New Mexico, is perhaps the only site in the world constructed in an elaborate pattern that mirrors the yearly cycle of the sun and the 19-year cycle of the moon. How did an ancient civilization, with no known written language, arrange its buildings into a virtual celestial calendar, spanning an area roughly the size of Ireland? Why did this society, ancestors of today's Pueblo Indians, choose to establish the center of their world in the middle of such an arid, barren land? And why, after constructing buildings the size of the Roman Coliseum, did these same people deliberately seal them and abruptly leave? These enigmas have puzzled archaeologists for centuries. This program presents substantial evidence that the Chacoan people expressed a complex solar and lunar cosmology in their magnificent architecture. The discoveries documented in the film have transformed scientific understanding of this site -- one of the most elaborate and mysterious of ancient Native-American ruins -- and are revolutionizing perceptions of the Chacoan civilization. Robert Redford narrates.

As snow falls and Christmas lights glow in Jackson Hole, a holiday season of a different sort settles in just beyond the town, in the great winter world of Yellowstone. Breathtaking landscapes frame intimate scenes of wolves and coyotes, elk and bison, bears and otters as they make their way through their most challenging season of the year. NATURE journeys in the footsteps of the men who first explored the park, and travels with their modern-day counterpart on his own journey of discovery. From the unique crystals of individual snowflakes to the grand sweep of Yellowstone's Hayden Valley, this is a Christmas like no other.

Perspectives: "A Look Ahead to the Year 2007" – What religion stories are likely to make news in the New Year? E.J. Dionne, columnist for The Washington Post and a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, Jeffrey Goldberg, Washington correspondent for The New Yorker, and Rachel Zoll, religion writer for the Associated Press, join host Bob Abernethy for an annual discussion and analysis of the news stories predicted to make headlines in 2007. Among the topics discussed in this studio segment are: civil war in Iraq and the U.S. response; American intervention in re-establishing Israeli-Palestinian dialogue; the international and domestic policy agenda to be set by the new Democratic-controlled Congress; the shifting attitudes of evangelical Christians toward social and environmental issues; the threat of schism within the U.S. Episcopal Church and the Anglican Communion's reaction to the Church's first female presiding bishop; the role of religion in the political process; Iran and Korea's nuclear programs; and Pope Benedict's efforts to restore the Catholic Church in Europe. Belief and Practice: "The Hajj" – The Islamic ritual of "the Hajj," or spiritual journey to Mecca is underway in Saudi Arabia. Muslims who are physically and financially able to fulfill this obligation are expected to do so at least once in their lifetime. Over two million pilgrims are expected this year, including 30-40,000 from the United States, more than ever before. Preparations begin months in advance and special Hajj travel agencies offer package pricing including food, lodging and transportation. Imam Shaker Elsayed of Dar Al Hijrah Mosque in Falls Church, Virginia explains how Muslims prepare for this holy observance and the obligations of the "Fifth Pillar of Islam."

People earning the smallest paychecks in America often rely on that money to support their entire families. Six states will be voting to raise their minimum wage in the upcoming election. One of them is Missouri, where the topic has become a hot political issue. Meanwhile, Texas, home to more minimum wage workers than any other state, has no ballot initiative to raise the minimum wage, leaving workers with very desperate choices. These are the people who clean our clothes, our offices, and our hotel rooms, while most of us look the other way. How we treat them - and not just during election cycles - says a lot about our national character. In two separate reports, one on-air and one online, NOW looks at the impact of low wages on both politics and families, and what steps some are taking to fight for a "living wage".

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

Few people ever meet a dwarf face-to-face. In this personal journey, documentary filmmaker Steve Delano shows firsthand how a genetic mutation marks a person for life. He reveals the isolation of his school years, his "ludicrous" strategies to fit in as well as the mixed blessings of dwarfism. In this film, Delano exercises the license of stature and his irreverent sense of humor to confront head-on conventional representations and misperceptions about dwarfs. From growing up a "freak" - a form of forced celebrity - to finally accepting and asserting his difference, Delano provides an idiosyncratic perspective based on a tip-toe life, and contemplates a future where genetic engineering may eliminate "people of difference" altogether.

In June 1900, Major Walter Reed, Chief Surgeon of the U.S. Army, led a medical team to Cuba on a mission to investigate yellow fever. For more than 200 years, the disease had terrorized the United States, killing an estimated 100,000 people in the 19th century alone. Shortly after Reed and his team arrived in Havana, they began testing the radical theories of Carlos Finlay, a Cuban doctor who believed that mosquitoes spread yellow fever. This program documents the heroic efforts of Reed's medical team, some of whom put their own lives on the line to verify Finlay's theory. When yellow fever struck New Orleans in 1905, an aggressive mosquito eradication campaign successfully ended the epidemic. It was the last yellow fever outbreak in the United States and the first major public health triumph of the 20th century.

While medical advances have enabled an unprecedented number of Americans to live longer and healthier lives, this new longevity has also had unintended consequences. For millions of Americans, living longer also means serious chronic illness and a protracted physical decline that can require an immense amount of care, often for years and sometimes even decades. Yet just as the need for care is rising, the number of available caregivers is dwindling. With families more dispersed than ever and a healthcare system overburdened, many experts fear that we are on the threshold of a major crisis in care.

On May 6, 2005, the residents of Spokane, Washington, awoke to one of the strangest headlines in the town's history: "West Tied to Sex Abuse in '70s, Using Office to Lure Young Men". The popular, socially conservative Republican mayor of Spokane, Jim West, had been outed by the town's newspaper The Spokesman-Review. The paper told the sordid story of a man with two lives: in public, he had once sponsored legislation forbidding gays from teaching in public schools, while in private, the paper alleged, he was trawling for young men online, using the trappings of his office to lure them into sexual relationships. But as bizarre as the revelations were, so too were the newspaper's methods. For months, a middle-aged "forensic computer specialist" had posed as an eighteen-year-old boy online, engaging the mayor in a relationship that became more and more intimate, ultimately exploding on the front page of the newspaper. With unfettered access to all the principal players, FRONTLINE explores how this story forced an all-American town to confront its most basic feelings about homosexuality and sheds new light on the confusing, often contradictory, experience of gay people themselves in a place far from the main battlefields of the culture wars.

In the mid-1850s, thousands of Latter-day Saint emigrants crowded the docks of Liverpool, dreaming of a new life in the Salt Lake Valley. After an arduous ocean voyage and an overland trip to Iowa, they loaded their belongings into handcarts, which they then began pulling the nearly 1,300 miles to the Salt Lake Valley. But for the Willie and Martin companies, numerous delays in an already late start led to a near-catastrophe, as the emigrants found themselves running out of provisions and stranded in treacherous snowstorms on the high plains of Wyoming. This is the story of those who were stranded and those who came to their rescue in one of the greatest acts of heroism of the 19th century.

Americans are swimming in a sea of messages. Each year, legions of ad people, copywriters, market researchers, pollsters, consultants, and even linguists - most of whom work for one of six giant companies - spend billions of dollars and millions of man-hours trying to determine how to persuade consumers what to buy, whom to trust, and what to think. Increasingly, these techniques are migrating to the high-stakes arena of politics, shaping policy and influencing how Americans choose their leaders. In "The Persuaders," FRONTLINE exposes the inner workings of the marketing and advertising industries, and the new and surprising methods they use to decipher who we are and what we want.

Ain't Scared of Your Jails (1960-1961) Black college students take a leadership role in the civil rights movement as lunch counter sit-ins spread across the South. "Freedom Riders" also try to desegregate interstate buses, but they are brutally attacked as they travel. No Easy Walk (1961-1963) The civil rights movement discovers the power of mass demonstrations as the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. emerges as its most visible leader. Some demonstrations succeed; others fail. But the triumphant March on Washington, D.C., under King's leadership, shows a mounting national support for civil rights. President John F. Kennedy proposes the Civil Rights Act.

In "A Seat at the Drum," journalist Mark Anthony Rolo (Bad River Ojibwe) seeks to learn how Native Americans in Los Angeles preserve a tribal identity, survive economically and cope with the pressures of assimilation in a challenging metropolis. His personal quest to come to terms with these issues leads him to meet Native community leaders, Indians relocated from reservations, boarding school students, Native business leaders and single parent families whose stories typify the experiences of urban Indians. As these characters tell how Indians in Los Angeles create community and retain a connection to their tribes; choose whether their language and traditions are relevant in the modern world; cope with mounting social problems and declining social services; and develop business empires fueled by gaming profits, Rolo is propelled toward a reckoning with his own identity. Rolo finds that though relocated Indians seem to lose their tribal identity, indigenous California tribes such as the Gabrieleno/Tongva and the Pechanga Band of Luiseno Indians strive to strengthen theirs. Original inhabitants of the LA Basin, the Gabrieleno/Tongva tribe grasp threads of their original birdsongs, traditional ways and history in an idealistic attempt to gain Federal recognition, and with that, the golden road that the Pechanga have achieved. The Pechanga, a dwindling band before the National Indian Gaming Act was passed, are now so prosperous that Governor Schwarzenegger looks to them and other gaming tribes to help bail out California debt. But what makes them Indian? Is a Federal I.D. number enough? Do the wealthy Indians bear responsibility for philanthropy toward the poor?

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

A report of an extraordinary political scandal. The scale of corruption still coming to light dwarfs anything since Watergate. In one sense it's the age-old tale of greed, but greed encouraged now by the way our system works. Deep in the plea bargains of Jack Abramoff and his cronies is the admission that they conspired to use campaign contributions to bribe politicians; campaign finance is the core of the corruption. They took great pains to cover their tracks and they might have pulled it off except for a handful of honest people, and the work of some enterprising print reporters, Senate investigators, and the ethics team at the Department of Justice. Following the money in this story leads us through a bizarre maze of cocktail parties, golf courses, private jets, four-star restaurants, sweatshops and the chandeliered rooms frequented by the high and mighty in Washington. Stay with the twists and turns and the pieces fall into place. But keep in mind that what you're seeing is only a partial picture; we have not seen the end of Capitol crimes.

The Foley fallout out: behind the headlines. And the worsening situation in Iraq: what officials are now admitting tonight on Washington Week. Rep. Stephanie Tubbs Jones said, "We have a job to do and we got to do our job". That job? Getting to the bottom of the sordid congressional page scandal which has resulted in resignation, investigation, and consternation and close congressional races around the country. From a campaign ad: For over a year they knowingly ignored the welfare of children. Rep. Dennis Hastert (R-IL), (as seen from a tape.)

"Ultimately, as someone has said in Washington before, the buck stops here." We take a closer look. Meanwhile, the situation in Iraq gets only worse. According to a military spokesman, "Attacks have steadily increased in Baghdad during these past weeks". And an influential U.S. senator sounds the warning bell. Covering these stories this week: Janet Hook of the Los Angeles Times, John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal, John Harris of the Washington Post, and Linda Robinson of U.S. News and World Report.

North Korea front and center, what's at stake in the midterm elections, and the latest Foley fallout, tonight on "Washington Week." "The proclaimed actions taken by North Korea are unacceptable", said President George Bush. North Korea ups the ante, calling the world's bluff with what it says was a successful nuclear weapons test. Kofi Annan [UN Secretary General] claims, "It complicates an already difficult security situation in the Korean Peninsula". But if the test did happen, what are the United States and the United Nations prepared to do about it? "We shouldn't allow meetings and more meetings and more meetings and more meetings to be an excuse for inaction," says John Bolton [U.S. ambassador to the UN]. Keeping all the balls in the air: the president takes to the podium and to the road to defend his presidency and to toss out a political lifeline to congressional Republicans. Pres. Bush says "I'm proud to be standing with the current Speaker of the House, who is going to be the future Speaker of the House". But polls show GOP incumbents around the country struggling. We look at the key contests. Also, the effect Washington scandals may be having on these precarious midterm elections. Covering these stories this week: David Sanger of the New York Times, Martha Raddatz of ABC News, Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal, and Karen Tumulty of Time Magazine.

The future of the Internet is up for grabs. Last year, the FCC eliminated "net neutrality" rules, which allowed every American and every company to access the Internet equally. Today, big corporations are lobbying Washington to turn the World Wide Web into a toll road, threatening democracy's newest forum. Yet the public knows little about what's happening behind closed doors on Capitol Hill. Some activists put it this way: a few mega media giants own the content and control the delivery of radio, television, and the press; if we let them take control of the Internet as well, who will pay the price?

In the aftermath of the fall of Saddam Hussein, a group of Americans led by Ambassador L. Paul Bremer III set off to Baghdad to build a new nation and establish democracy in the Arab Middle East. One year later, with Bremer forced to secretly exit what some have called "the most dangerous place on earth," the group left behind lawlessness, insurgency, economic collapse, death, destruction - and much of their idealism. Three years later, as the U.S. continues to look for an exit strategy, the government the Americans helped create and the infrastructure they designed are being tested. FRONTLINE producer Michael Kirk follows the early efforts and ideals of this group as they tried to seize control and disband the Iraqi police, army and Baathist government - and how they became hardened along the way to the realities of postwar Iraq. The program is based on numerous first-person interviews and extensive documentation from the FRONTLINE team that produced "Rumsfeld's War," "The Torture Question" and "The Dark Side."

Separating a political campaign from the big money that feeds it (and the accompanying special interest that all too often corrupts it) seems like a quixotic endeavor at best. But don't tell that to a "cleanly-elected" politician in Arizona or Maine, or to Proposition 89 supporters in California. To them, the fight to make elections free, fair, and publicly funded is nothing short of a peoples' revolution in American politics. The more we investigated, the more obvious it became that we needed a full hour to cover the "Clean Election" movement and its ramifications on our democracy. And so, this Friday we present "Votes for Sale?" the story of a grass roots rebellion that is inspiring citizens coast to coast, but also creating a contentious debate about how far a candidate should be allowed to go to win your vote.

People earning the smallest paychecks in America often rely on that money to support their entire families. Six states will be voting to raise their minimum wage in the upcoming election. One of them is Missouri, where the topic has become a hot political issue. Meanwhile, Texas, home to more minimum wage workers than any other state, has no ballot initiative to raise the minimum wage, leaving workers with very desperate choices. These are the people who clean our clothes, our offices, and our hotel rooms, while most of us look the other way. How we treat them - and not just during election cycles - says a lot about our national character. In two separate reports, one on-air and one online, NOW looks at the impact of low wages on both politics and families, and what steps some are taking to fight for a "living wage".

Election year meltdown: the House and the Senate both up for grabs as the White House grapples with setbacks in Iraq and North Korea, tonight on "Washington Week." Forget about red states and blue states: Republicans this year are seeing only a sea of purple in one bad poll after another. As House incumbents battle pre-election investigation. Rep. Curt Weldon (R-Pa) says, "I would not have wished this for anyone and three weeks before the election it makes the campaign that much more difficult." And some Republicans speculate about what will happen if they lose the Senate, too. Sen. John McCain (R-Az) said, "I think I'll just commit suicide. I don't want to face that eventuality because I don't think it's going to happen." Meanwhile, the president hits the campaign trail while coping with bad news from Iraq and sobering news from North Korea that has rattled old allies. Iraq. The word itself has transcended geography and now has a new definition: "problem." But how big a problem it is still depends on who you ask. With a crucial mid-term election days away, NOW put Iraq's "problem" status to the test by traveling to one of the most pro-military communities in the country. In Texas' 31st Congressional district, home to America's largest active army base, we take a penetrating and surprising look at the people and politics of President Bush's home state. On NOW Online (www.pbs.org/now), watch web-exclusive video reports about two Texas candidates, both veterans, both making the war the center of their campaigns, but each coming at it from a radically different point of view. Finally, no one could ever accuse journalist Andrew Sullivan of being shy with his opinions. In an insightful interview, he talks to David Brancaccio about what the mid-term elections will mean for Republicans now and in the future. Are they doomed? Andrew says yes...and no.

When's the last time we had an Election Night that actually ended on Election Night? That's certainly not the only question people came away with after the dust finally settled to reveal that Democrats had seized control of both houses of Congress. In this week's show we're tackling some of those questions with the help of Salon.com editor-in-chief Joan Walsh. At the same time, we're taking a look back at the issues and people featured in our pre-election coverage to see if those political and personal stories had happy or sad endings (hint: both). On NOW Online (www.pbs.org/now), check out how hot-button ballot initiatives fared around the country, with a generous helping of NOW insight. And take our online poll to let us know if you think President Bush and Nancy Pelosi can play nice.

With critical midterm elections just days away, we tell you what to watch for and why. Tonight, on "Washington Week," a year of debate over the war. Rep. Christopher Shays: (From tape.) said, "I support our being in Iraq. I don't care its impact on my election". A year of scandal. "Congressman Foley duped a lot of people, and he deceived me, too", claims Rep. Dennis Hastert (R-IL). From a political ad, Conrad Burns took $150,000 from convicted lobbyist Jack Abramoff and his associates. And a year of voter discontent. Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) said, "It would be a mistake for the voters to use me as a way to get a message to George Bush". A campaign with its share of verbal miscues. Sen. George Allen (R-VA), said, "This fellow here over here with the yellow shirt - Macaca or whatever his name is", and Sen. John Kerry (D-Ma) "You study hard and you do your homework and you make an effort to be smart, you can do well. If you don't, you get stuck in Iraq." And a campaign with cutting edge issues. Sen. Jim Talent (R-MO) said, "I supported the marriage amendment. I believe marriage is a relationship between a man and a woman." "Stem cell research offers hope to millions of Americans", said Michael J. Fox. The president this week made a last ditch appeal to reliable Republicans. President George Bush said, "It's good to be in a part of the world where the cowboy hats outnumber the ties." But for Republicans, the bad signs are outnumbering the good. Elections 2006, with analysis and reporting by Dan Balz of the Washington Post, John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal, Jackie Calmes of the Wall Street Journal, and Michael Duffy of TIME Magazine.

Washington turned upside down: the Democrats in, Rumsfeld out. Tonight, on "Washington Week." President George Bush said, "If you look at race by race, it was close. The cumulative effect, however, was not too close. It was a thumping." Even the president could not find a silver lining this time, as Democrats partied from coast to coast. Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) said, "Tonight is a great victory for the American people." Republicans licked their wounds. Senator George Allen (R-VA) declares, "The people of Virginia, they have spoken, and I respect their decision." Don Rumsfeld lost his job and Pres. Bush said, "I named a good man to succeed Donald Rumsfeld, former CIA Director Bob Gates." And both parties rethought the way they do business. Tonight we'll assess the impact of Election 2006, with Gloria Borger of CBS News and US News, Martha Raddatz of ABC News, Doyle McManus of the Los Angeles Times, and James Barnes of National Journal.

Last week we told you the Democrats are in charge. This week we ask what difference will it make? Tonight on Washington Week. Rep. Nancy Pelosi (D-CA) said, "As we say in church let there be peace on Earth and let it begin with us, let the healing begin". Maybe not so fast. Before the victory parties even ended Democrats were fighting among themselves in the House overshadowing the more orderly transition in the Senate. Sen. Mitch McConnell (R-KY) said, "We will be a robust minority, a vigorous minority and hopefully a minority that is only in that condition for a couple of years". Marked by one remarkable comeback. But will Democratic control make a difference in Iraq? Will it make a difference as presidential hopefuls prepare for 2008? And will it make a difference on issues that affect your life? Tonight, the environment. Covering these stories, Charles Babington of the Washington Post, Michael Duffy of Time Magazine, Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal, and Margaret Kriz of National Journal.

Bush prepares to meet with Iraq's prime minister as the search goes on for ideas on what to do. What are the options for the U.S. and where are they likely to come from, tonight on "Washington Week." Kofi Annan [UN Secretary General] says, "The U.S. in a way is trapped in Iraq; trapped in the sense that it cannot stay and it cannot leave." After one of the most violent weeks in Iraq since the war began, now what? President Bush hopes for some answers soon from Jim Baker's Iraq study group with no shortage of advice. Rep. Duncan Hunter claims, "I have an alternative and it's called 'Go Iraqi.'" Sen. John McCain says, "Another 20,000 troops-" Sen. Barack Obama suggests, "Phased redeployment-." In the meantime, a summit next week with Iraq's prime minister. Why now? What's behind the move by Iran and Syria to offer help of their own? And whatever the president decides, how much support is he likely to get, especially from his own party. What happens when best laid plans veer off course? The inside story on the summit and the memo, tonight, on "Washington Week." President George Bush said, "He's the right guy for Iraq, and we're going to help him." A presidential vote of confidence in Nouri al-Maliki that raised more questions than it answered. Did the Iraqi prime minister snub the president? Is Iraq really prepared to take control on the war on the ground by next summer? Has the country already lapsed into civil war? Kofi Annan [Un Secretary General] said, "We could be there. In fact, we are almost there." And if it has, is the U.S. staying or is it going? The bipartisan Iraq Study Group tackles some of those questions next week. We'll tell you what we already know. And in Congress, why elections matter. This week: subpoena power. How the Democrats plan to investigate, well, everything. Covering these stories this week, Martha Raddatz of ABC News, David Sanger of The New York Times, and Karen Tumulty of TIME Magazine.

Certainties and uncertainties about the war, control of the Senate, and the shape of the 2008 presidential race, tonight on "Washington Week." President George W. Bush stated, "I'm not going to be rushed into making a difficult decision." The president dialing down expectations on what comes next in Iraq, but many Americans and some politicians appear even more unhappy now than they were on election day. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) "I'd like to say that I believe conditions have improved. Certainly in Baghdad they have not." U.S. allies appear uncertain as well. We tell you what Saudi Arabia is telling the president. At home, uncertainty on the political front as a senator's illness throws political control into doubt. And another senator's ambitions throw the 2008 nomination battle into an uproar. Sen. Barack Obama exclaims, "This is our time." Plus, why elections matter. Americans are swimming in a sea of messages. Each year, legions of ad people, copywriters, market researchers, pollsters, consultants, and even linguists - most of whom work for one of six giant companies - spend billions of dollars and millions of man-hours trying to determine how to persuade consumers what to buy, whom to trust, and what to think. Increasingly, these techniques are migrating to the high-stakes arena of politics, shaping policy and influencing how Americans choose their leaders. In "The Persuaders," FRONTLINE exposes the inner workings of the marketing and advertising industries, and the new and surprising methods they use to decipher who we are and what we want.

The urge to surge: how the war in Iraq is changing on the ground there and on the ground here, tonight on "Washington Week." Secretary Of Defense Robert Gates said, "What's the mission? What's the purpose? Can we do this? How big should an increase be?" This was the week where the discussion about troop surges in Iraq turned from whether to when. The president led the charge. President George Bush said, (From tape.) "We enter this New Year clear-eyed about the challenges in Iraq." And his generals obediently, if reluctantly, follow. General John Abizaid said, "The Baghdad security situation requires more Iraqi troops, and that's the direction that we're headed right now." So what happens next? North Korea front and center, what's at stake in the midterm elections, and the latest Foley fallout, tonight on "Washington Week." "The proclaimed actions taken by North Korea are unacceptable", said President George Bush. North Korea ups the ante, calling the world's bluff with what it says was a successful nuclear weapons test. Kofi Annan [UN Secretary General] claims, "It complicates an already difficult security situation in the Korean Peninsula". But if the test did happen, what are the United States and the United Nations prepared to do about it? "We shouldn't allow meetings and more meetings and more meetings and more meetings to be an excuse for inaction," says John Bolton [U.S. ambassador to the UN]. Keeping all the balls in the air: the president takes to the podium and to the road to defend his presidency and to toss out a political lifeline to congressional Republicans. Pres. "Men in Church" -The early Christian church was dominated by men who devoted their lives to it. But according to some accounts, men began drifting away from the Church as early as the Middle Ages and the numbers continue to decline. In his recent book, "Why Men Hate Going to Church," author David Murrow attributes this trend to the gradual feminization of worship practices, where men's interests in adventure, challenge and change are downplayed. What are some churches doing to address this issue? Judy Valente looks at how some Christian congregations are reaching out to help men re-connect with the church and create a more dynamic spiritual experience.

Author Bruce Feiler brings his award winning book to life as he takes an archeological odyssey to visit the inscrutable desert landscape where the world's greatest religions were born. The three-part series takes viewers to some of the Bible's most inspiring places -- from the heights of Mount Ararat, where according to the Bible Noah's ark landed; to the desert in Turkey, where Abraham first heard the words of God and to the summit of Mt. Sinai, where Moses received the Ten Commandments. Combining breathtaking images, sweeping landscapes and intimate snapshots, the documentary puts a visual face on the stories that continue to inspire the human spirit. The first episode, "Go Forth: From Creation to Abraham," focuses on initial problems entering hostile areas in the Middle East, meeting Avner Goren -- a leading biblical archaeologist who becomes his traveling partner -- and the forbidding and dangerous environment of the Mesopotamian highlands, where civilization was born.

Egypt. Land of the Pharaohs--and of the Bible. Bruce Feiler continues his journey through the greatest stories ever told, by retracing Joseph's path to Egypt after his brothers sell him into bondage. When Joseph interprets the Pharaoh's dreams, he rises from slave to the heights of power and even brings his brothers and father Jacob to live in Egypt. Feiler takes us from the great temple of Karnak in Luxor, formerly ancient Thebes--to the pyramids and sphinx of Giza, and descends into the royal burial tombs in the Valley of the Kings. As he treks by camel, boat, horseback and even pyramid-climbing, he discovers how the ancient Egyptian culture and religion influenced the Israelites during their centuries-long stay in Egypt, especially in the importance placed on dreams and story-telling. Feiler explores the ancient ruins of cities where the Israelites were said to toil under an oppressive pharaoh. Beginning at the shallow waters of the Nile, Feiler retraces the story of one of the Bible's greatest figures, Moses, and his eventual confrontation with Pharaoh to let his people go. Did the Israelites build the pyramids? What could have caused the ten plagues? Was it really the Red Sea Moses crossed? As Feiler confronts these questions, on the very body of water that could have been where the waters were parted, he realizes that it isn't the location, or even the event that's important, but that it was experienced as an act of God.

The Sinai Desert. In the concluding chapter of "Walking the Bible," Bruce Feiler follows the Israelite's 40 year trek through what the Bible calls a "great and terrible wilderness." Feiler experiences the stark reality of the Sinai desert where it's a struggle simply to survive. He finds the locations said to be where God provided water and food for the Israelites - and discovers the secret of the tamarisk tree, which secretes a sweet, honey-like substance called "manna." In the shadow of the mountain believed to be the Biblical Mount Sinai, Feiler visits St. Catherine's Monastery, the oldest operating church in the world. He attends the services, a powerful, unchanged ritual of 1,500 years, and sees what's claimed to be the real "burning bush" in which God spoke to Moses. One of the monks, Texas-born Father Justin, shows him the Monastery's world-renowned library of priceless religious art and manuscripts. Later, when Feiler climbs Mt. Sinai where Moses is said to have received the Ten Commandments, he is struck by the spiritual significance of the land, and its relationship to the people, and to God. As he follows the 40 year route of the Israelites, he visits a local Bedouin family who also derive sustenance from the desert and travels to the "lost city" of Petra in Jordan, where the Israelites may have lived for many years. Nearing the end of Moses' journey, Feiler climbs Mt. Nebo, where God shows Moses the Promised Land the Israelites are about to enter. At the end of his own journey, Feiler realizes that although Moses is denied entrance himself, it is not the land after all that is important for Moses. It is his meeting with God.

Perspectives: "A Look Ahead to the Year 2007" — What religion stories are likely to make news in the New Year? E.J. Dionne, columnist for The Washington Post and a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution, Jeffrey Goldberg, Washington correspondent for The New Yorker, and Rachel Zoll, religion writer for the Associated Press, join host Bob Abernethy for an annual discussion and analysis of the news stories predicted to make headlines in 2007. Among the topics discussed in this studio segment are: civil war in Iraq and the U.S. response; American intervention in re-establishing Israeli-Palestinian dialogue; the international and domestic policy agenda to be set by the new Democratic-controlled Congress; the shifting attitudes of evangelical Christians toward social and environmental issues; the threat of schism within the U.S. Episcopal Church and the Anglican Communion's reaction to the Church's first female presiding bishop; the role of religion in the political process; Iran and Korea's nuclear programs; and Pope Benedict's efforts to restore the Catholic Church in Europe. Belief and Practice: "The Hajj" — The Islamic ritual of "the Hajj," or spiritual journey to Mecca is underway in Saudi Arabia. Muslims who are physically and financially able to fulfill this obligation are expected to do so at least once in their lifetime. Over two million pilgrims are expected this year, including 30-40,000 from the United States, more than ever before. Preparations begin months in advance and special Hajj travel agencies offer package pricing including food, lodging and transportation. Imam Shaker Elsayed of Dar Al Hijrah Mosque in Falls Church, Virginia explains how Muslims prepare for this holy observance and the obligations of the "Fifth Pillar of Islam."

In the mid-1850s, thousands of Latter-day Saint emigrants crowded the docks of Liverpool, dreaming of a new life in the Salt Lake Valley. After an arduous ocean voyage and an overland trip to Iowa, they loaded their belongings into handcarts, which they then began pulling the nearly 1,300 miles to the Salt Lake Valley. But for the Willie and Martin companies, numerous delays in an already late start led to a near-catastrophe, as the emigrants found themselves running out of provisions and stranded in treacherous snowstorms on the high plains of Wyoming. This is the story of those who were stranded and those who came to their rescue in one of the greatest acts of heroism of the 19th century.

Few people ever meet a dwarf face-to-face. In this personal journey, documentary filmmaker Steve Delano shows firsthand how a genetic mutation marks a person for life. He reveals the isolation of his school years, his "ludicrous" strategies to fit in as well as the mixed blessings of dwarfism. In this film, Delano exercises the license of stature and his irreverent sense of humor to confront head-on conventional representations and misperceptions about dwarfs. From growing up a "freak" - a form of forced celebrity - to finally accepting and asserting his difference, Delano provides an idiosyncratic perspective based on a tip-toe life, and contemplates a future where genetic engineering may eliminate "people of difference" altogether.

The flaming explosion of the Hindenburg over Lakehurst, New Jersey in 1937 is one of the most famous disasters of the 20th century. It took more than 100 years to develop what was, in its day, the fastest, most technologically advanced and most luxurious form of transportation in the world. It took only 34 seconds to destroy it. The accident that put an end to the golden age of airships is widely believed to have been caused by the ignition of hydrogen gas used for lift. But Addison Bain, a retired NASA scientist, was not satisfied with that explanation. A hydrogen specialist who believed that it is the clean and safe fuel of the future, he set out on a personal quest of theorizing and experimentation to prove that the Hindenburg's real flaw was only skin deep.

Secrets of the Dead: Umbrella Assassin is an amazing Cold War story about a Bulgarian dissident who was shot with a poison pellet from an umbrella gun while he was waiting at a bus stop. For many reasons over the last 30 years, the investigations were thwarted, but in our film we go back and re-examine it from start to finish. We even name the triggerman, who is still on the loose in Europe. This is a forensic investigation that looks at how the gun and the poison pellet actually worked, but it's also a bigger Cold War political investigation that explores why the various investigations were stonewalled, and how the KGB may have been working with the Bulgarians to pull off the assassination. Even though the assassination happened a long time ago, the story is relevant right now because the statute of limitations on the murder is about to run out, so within a few years the assassin will have nothing left to worry about. To complicate things even more, Bulgaria is currently applying to be a member of the European Union so they are not particularly interested in having this investigation into their shady past reignited.

"Magnetic Storm"--On March 13, 1989, the lights went out all across Canada and the eastern seaboard of the United States as far south as New York. The most serious power grid failure in American history was caused by a magnetic storm in the earth's upper atmosphere, itself triggered by the eruption of a huge flare from the surface of the Sun. Unusual as this event may seem, many scientists today are beginning to worry that it may be a harbinger of things to come, and that changes to the planet's magnetic field could make earth ever more vulnerable to deadly radiation from space. For nearly a century, humans forgot their glorious past and huddled in a state of ignorance and fear. Scientists have uncovered evidence from around the world that indicates that the early Dark Ages may have been triggered by an actual event that occurred around 535 A.D. Science writer David Keys believes that the cause was a natural phenomenon of cataclysmic proportions. Determined to discover the exact nature of this catastrophe, and to understand its political, economic and social repercussions, he embarks on a scientific odyssey that ranges from Greenland to the Antarctica; from the Americas to the Far East. At the center of a stunningly-complex chain of events seems to be a loud bang (according to Keys this was a volcanic explosion equal to two thousand million Hiroshima size bombs.) The subsequent environmental calamity, he believes, affected human civilization from Mongolia to Constantinople, precipitating plague, famine, death, great migration, the fall of the great Mexican city of Teotihuacan, the Anglo-Saxon victory over the Celts, and may even have played a role in the rise of Islam.

In 1941, the world was at war and the Allies were desperate to slow the tide of Nazi domination. The Germans needed 100 gallons of water to make one ton of steel. Barnes Wallis, a British aircraft designer, set out to develop a unique weapon that would detonate dams -- a bomb that could skip across water, cling to its target and explode at a specific depth to deliver its coup de grace. This program investigates the urgent rush to create, test and deploy the new bomb, and the efforts to train an elite squadron of pilots for the unusually dangerous low-level night flights to drop it far inside enemy lines. Using archival footage, modern tests of the original principles and equipment, and interviews with experts, participants in the raids and their surviving relatives, the program provides insight into the ingenuity of the man who built the bomb under incredible pressure, as well as the dedication and bravery of the airmen from Britain, Canada, America, Australia and New Zealand who risked (and lost) their lives in one of the most daring missions of WWII.

A century of flight has seen the warplane develop from a crude instrument of wood and wires into a decisive weapon of modern combat. Join us as we trace the technologies that drove the evolution of warplanes through two World Wars and into the future.

This era of aviation history saw a number of major developments: an increased understanding of aerodynamics that allowed engineers to build planes that could fly faster and farther; the invention of radar, which enabled defensive forces to detect approaching aircraft; the rise of the fighter ace pilots; and improved bomb delivery systems. This last development may have had the most destructive and terrifying effects, giving rise to the Blitz over London, the firebombing of Germany, and the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

Version: SD-Stacked
Length: 120

Format: Documentary

The first hour covers the period 1946-1990. The jet engine was one of the most defining pieces of mid-20th-century technology. It led to revolutionary change in aerial combat and in the military role of the airplane. The second hour covers the period 1955-present. Throughout the last century, covert surveillance has been key to military success. But as defenses against airplanes improved through the decades, the airplanes themselves have undergone a transformation of design. Missed opportunities, a vital arms race and the secrets hidden among the spoils of war come vividly to life in the third program of WARPLANE. In the latter days of World War II, Britain and Germany feverishly advanced early dreams of a jet airplane, a defining piece of mid-20th-century technology that would revolutionize existing airplane roles and create an entirely new generation of mission-specific machines. With the world in the grip of the Cold War, combat planes became faster and more agile, spy planes cruised over enemy territory at dizzying heights and dazzling speeds, and jet-powered helicopters entered military service. Designers, test pilots and combat crews took huge risks as they pushed the technological envelope, and within 58 years of Orville Wright's historic flight at Kitty Hawk, man had broken through the boundaries of both sound and space.

Over the trenches of World War I, the "eye in the sky" had been indispensable. Since that time, developers have worked endlessly to make planes harder to spot and shoot down. Speed worked at first, then the ability to fly high, but each advance was eventually met by a counter-advance that all but neutralized it. Until, that is, the birth of the computer. With the computer age came avionics - systems to control planes that humans could never fly. These systems, combined with new materials, designs and paints, as well as the unwavering commitment and singular vision of men like Skunk Works' Ben Rich, gave rise to the most recent revolution in military aviation - stealth planes that are all but invisible to enemy eyes. Like the jet engine before it, stealth technology has transformed warfare, and together with ever-advanced precision ordnance and purely autonomous planes, has positioned the world's most advanced air forces for a future here in-cockpit pilots may no longer be necessary.

With 35 million people in America now age sixty-five and older, "the old old"-those over 85-are now considered the fastest growing segment of the U.S. population. While medical advances have enabled an unprecedented number of Americans to live longer and healthier lives, this new longevity has also had unintended consequences. For millions of Americans, living longer also means serious chronic illness and a protracted physical decline that can require an immense amount of care, often for years and sometimes even decades. Yet just as the need for care is rising, the number of available caregivers is dwindling. With families more dispersed than ever and a healthcare system overburdened, many experts fear that we are on the threshold of a major crisis in care.

Building a submarine without the resources of a big shipyard and using only scavenged or off-the-shelf parts is an unusual idea by any standard. But Peter Robbins has dreamed of submarines all his life, and he is an unusually determined man. Over the course of four years, Robbins staked everything he owned to build his own submarine, the Alicia, in a bid to explore, first-hand, the sunken wrecks of German U-boats. As an engineer, he is fascinated by the precision of U-boat technology; as an entrepreneur, he is intrigued by the prospect of underwater tourism. Assembled from more than two million parts, at a cost of $1.5 million, will the Alicia be the success he hoped for? The flaming explosion of the Hindenburg over Lakehurst, New Jersey in 1937 is one of the most famous disasters of the 20th century. It took more than 100 years to develop what was, in its day, the fastest, most technologically advanced and most luxurious form of transportation in the world. It took only 34 seconds to destroy it. The accident that put an end to the golden age of airships is widely believed to have been caused by the ignition of hydrogen gas used for lift. But Addison Bain, a retired NASA scientist, was not satisfied with that explanation. A hydrogen specialist who believed that it is the clean and safe fuel of the future, he set out on a personal quest of theorizing and experimentation to prove that the Hindenburg's real flaw was only skin deep.

On October 19, 1901, the people of Paris turned out by the thousands to watch a dashing, impeccably dressed Brazilian-born inventor, Alberto Santos-Dumont, conquer skies. His fragile, gas-powered balloon made an astounding half-hour flight over the city and around the Eiffel Tower, and later, he piloted Europe's first- ever airplane flight. For a brief moment of glory, Santos-Dumont was the toast of Paris and acclaimed around the world. Then, eclipsed by the growing fame of the Wright Brothers, Santos-Dumont began slipping into illness and depression. During World War I, the airplane, which he believed to be his own invention, became a lethal weapon, eventually driving him to despair and suicide. Featuring captivating recreations and replicas of Santos' pioneering balloons and airplanes, NOVA reveals the daring flights and dramatic life of a neglected genius.

The Foley fallout out: behind the headlines. And the worsening situation in Iraq: what officials are now admitting tonight on Washington Week. Rep. Stephanie Tubbs Jones said, "We have a job to do and we got to do our job". That job? Getting to the bottom of the sordid congressional page scandal which has resulted in resignation, investigation, and consternation and close congressional races around the country. From a campaign ad: For over a year they knowingly ignored the welfare of children. Rep. Dennis Hastert (R-IL), (as seen from a tape.) "Ultimately, as someone has said in Washington before, the buck stops here." We take a closer look. Meanwhile, the situation in Iraq gets only worse. According to a military spokesman, "Attacks have steadily increased in Baghdad during these past weeks". And an influential U.S. senator sounds the warning bell. Covering these stories this week: Janet Hook of the Los Angeles Times, John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal, John Harris of the Washington Post, and Linda Robinson of U.S. News and World Report.

North Korea front and center, what's at stake in the midterm elections, and the latest Foley fallout, tonight on "Washington Week." "The proclaimed actions taken by North Korea are unacceptable", said President George Bush. North Korea ups the ante, calling the world's bluff with what it says was a successful nuclear weapons test. Kofi Annan [UN Secretary General] claims, "It complicates an already difficult security situation in the Korean Peninsula". But if the test did happen, what are the United States and the United Nations prepared to do about it? "We shouldn't allow meetings and more meetings and more meetings and more meetings to be an excuse for inaction," says John Bolton [U.S. ambassador to the UN]. Keeping all the balls in the air: the president takes to the podium and to the road to defend his presidency and to toss out a political lifeline to congressional Republicans. Pres. Bush says "I'm proud to be standing with the current Speaker of the House, who is going to be the future Speaker of the House". But polls show GOP incumbents around the country struggling. We look at the key contests. Also, the effect Washington scandals may be having on these precarious midterm elections. Covering these stories this week: David Sanger of the New York Times, Martha Raddatz of ABC News, Jeanne Cummings of the Wall Street Journal, and Karen Tumulty of Time Magazine.

Working alone in Iraq over eight months, filmmaker Laura Poitras (P.O.V. "Flag Wars") created an extraordinary, intimate portrait of Iraqis living under U.S. occupation. Her principal focus is Dr. Riyadh, an Iraqi medical doctor, father of six and Sunni political candidate. An outspoken critic of the occupation, he is equally passionate about the need to establish democracy in Iraq, arguing that Sunni participation in the January 2005 elections is essential. Yet all around him, Dr. Riyadh sees only chaos, as his waiting room fills each day with patients suffering the physical and mental effects of ever-increasing violence. Poitras gained remarkable access to the Sunni community, U.S. military and the U.N., resulting in this powerful mosaic of daily life in Iraq not seen in the mainstream media.

In the aftermath of the fall of Saddam Hussein, a group of Americans led by Ambassador L. Paul Bremer III set off to Baghdad to build a new nation and establish democracy in the Arab Middle East. One year later, with Bremer forced to secretly exit what some have called "the most dangerous place on earth," the group left behind lawlessness, insurgency, economic collapse, death, destruction - and much of their idealism. Three years later, as the U.S. continues to look for an exit strategy, the government the Americans helped create and the infrastructure they designed are being tested. FRONTLINE producer Michael Kirk follows the early efforts and ideals of this group as they tried to seize control and disband the Iraqi police, army and Baathist government - and how they became hardened along the way to the realities of postwar Iraq. The program is based on numerous first-person interviews and extensive documentation from the FRONTLINE team that produced "Rumsfeld's War," "The Torture Question" and "The Dark Side."

What is the one principle, belief, or cause for which you would sacrifice everything - including your life? Ethical, spiritual, and ideological values that are central to the human experience find their voice in the documentary film, Last Best Hope, an intimate, riveting, little-known story about the ordinary men and women in the Belgian Resistance and their extraordinary acts to save and repatriate downed Allied airmen during the Second World War. At the heart of the story is 85-year old American Bill Grosvenor, a P-47 Thunderbolt pilot who fell from the skies over Belgium and into the hands of the Resistance in 1943. Nearly sixty years later, Grosvenor is reunited with his helpers in Belgium who fought against tyranny and oppression in their homes, in their neighborhoods, and in the streets of Brussels. Resistance fighters share for the first time their daring and heartrending stories, allowing Last Best Hope to explore the myriad motivations that propel one stranger to help another, despite the risk to his or her own life and everything dear. As unexpectedly as the Gestapo snared Grosvenor in an early morning safehouse raid, Last Best Hope transports the viewer to another place and time with a universal message about faith, hope, and the undefeatable power of the human spirit. Stunning and cathartic, Last Best Hope takes even the most jaded WWII film buff by surprise.

Election year meltdown: the House and the Senate both up for grabs as the White House grapples with setbacks in Iraq and North Korea, tonight on "Washington Week." Forget about red states and blue states: Republicans this year are seeing only a sea of purple in one bad poll after another. As House incumbents battle pre-election investigation. Rep. Curt Weldon (R-Pa) says, "I would not have wished this for anyone and three weeks before the election it makes the campaign that much more difficult." And some Republicans speculate about what will happen if they lose the Senate, too. Sen. John McCain (R-Az) said, "I think I'll just commit suicide. I don't want to face that eventuality because I don't think it's going to happen." Meanwhile, the president hits the campaign trail while coping with bad news from Iraq and sobering news from North Korea that has rattled old allies. On October 19, 1901, the people of Paris turned out by the thousands to watch a dashing, impeccably dressed Brazilian-born inventor, Alberto Santos-Dumont, conquer skies. His fragile, gas-powered balloon made an astounding half-hour flight over the city and around the Eiffel Tower, and later, he piloted Europe's first- ever airplane flight. For a brief moment of glory, Santos-Dumont was the toast of Paris and acclaimed around the world. Then, eclipsed by the growing fame of the Wright Brothers, Santos-Dumont began slipping into illness and depression. During World War I, the airplane, which he believed to be his own invention, became a lethal weapon, eventually driving him to despair and suicide. Featuring captivating recreations and replicas of Santos' pioneering balloons and airplanes, NOVA reveals the daring flights and dramatic life of a neglected genius.

Iraq. The word itself has transcended geography and now has a new definition: "problem." But how big a problem it is still depends on who you ask. With a crucial mid-term election days away, NOW put Iraq's "problem" status to the test by traveling to one of the most pro-military communities in the country. In Texas' 31st Congressional district, home to America's largest active army base, we take a penetrating and surprising look at the people and politics of President Bush's home state. On NOW Online (www.pbs.org/now), watch web-exclusive video reports about two Texas candidates, both veterans, both making the war the center of their campaigns, but each coming at it from a radically different point of view. Finally, no one could ever accuse journalist Andrew Sullivan of being shy with his opinions. In an insightful interview, he talks to David Brancaccio about what the mid-term elections will mean for Republicans now and in the future. Are they doomed? Andrew says yes...and no.

O.B. Date: 2/12/2003
Service: PBS
Format: Documentary

In 1941, the world was at war and the Allies were desperate to slow the tide of Nazi domination. The Germans needed 100 gallons of water to make one ton of steel. Barnes Wallis, a British aircraft designer, set out to develop a unique weapon that would detonate dams -- a bomb that could skip across water, cling to its target and explode at a specific depth to deliver its coup de grace. This program investigates the urgent rush to create, test and deploy the new bomb, and the efforts to train an elite squadron of pilots for the unusually dangerous low-level night flights to drop it far inside enemy lines. Using archival footage, modern tests of the original principles and equipment, and interviews with experts, participants in the raids and their surviving relatives, the program provides insight into the ingenuity of the man who built the bomb under incredible pressure, as well as the dedication and bravery of the airmen from Britain, Canada, America, Australia and New Zealand who risked (and lost) their lives in one of the most daring missions of WWII.

In the summer of 1942, two ace fighter pilots -- one American and one Japanese -- faced off during a dramatic dogfight in the skies over Guadalcanal. Eventually the Japanese pilot shot down the American, who crash landed behind enemy lines but managed to escape before being captured. Using both pilots' comprehensive (but sometimes contradictory) memoirs, and following a forensic expedition to the recently-found American plane, "Dogfight Over Guadalcanal" examines and recreates every anxious second of the WWII showdown over the Pacific, revealing just how evenly matched the two men were and how they both survived, despite serious injuries.

A century of flight has seen the warplane develop from a crude instrument of wood and wires into a decisive weapon of modern combat. Join us as we trace the technologies that drove the evolution of warplanes through two World Wars and into the future.

This era of aviation history saw a number of major developments: an increased understanding of aerodynamics that allowed engineers to build planes that could fly faster and farther; the invention of radar, which enabled defensive forces to detect approaching aircraft; the rise of the fighter ace pilots; and improved bomb delivery systems. This last development may have had the most destructive and terrifying effects, giving rise to the Blitz over London, the firebombing of Germany, and the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

The first hour covers the period 1946-1990. The jet engine was one of the most defining pieces of mid-20th-century technology. It led to revolutionary change in aerial combat and in the military role of the airplane. The second hour covers the period 1955-present. Throughout the last century, covert surveillance has been key to military success. But as defenses against airplanes improved through the decades, the airplanes themselves have undergone a transformation of design. Missed opportunities, a vital arms race and the secrets hidden among the spoils of war come vividly to life in the third program of WARPLANE. In the latter days of World War II, Britain and Germany feverishly advanced early dreams of a jet airplane, a defining piece of mid- 20th-century technology that would revolutionize existing airplane roles and create an entirely new generation of mission-specific machines. With the world in the grip of the Cold War, combat planes became faster and more agile, spy planes cruised over enemy territory at dizzying heights and dazzling speeds, and jet-powered helicopters entered military service. Designers, test pilots and combat crews took huge risks as they pushed the technological envelope, and within 58 years of Orville Wright's historic flight at Kitty Hawk, man had broken through the boundaries of both sound and space.

Over the trenches of World War I, the "eye in the sky" had been indispensable. Since that time, developers have worked endlessly to make planes harder to spot and shoot down. Speed worked at first, then the ability to fly high, but each advance was eventually met by a counter-advance that all but neutralized it. Until, that is, the birth of the computer. With the computer age came avionics - systems to control planes that humans could never fly. These systems, combined with new materials, designs and paints, as well as the unwavering commitment and singular vision of men like Skunk Works' Ben Rich, gave rise to the most recent revolution in military aviation - stealth planes that are all but invisible to enemy eyes. Like the jet engine before it, stealth technology has transformed warfare, and together with ever-advanced precision ordnance and purely autonomous planes, has positioned the world's most advanced air forces for a future here in-cockpit pilots may no longer be necessary.

Certainties and uncertainties about the war, control of the Senate, and the shape of the 2008 presidential race, tonight on "Washington Week." President George W. Bush stated, "I'm not going to be rushed into making a difficult decision." The president dialing down expectations on what comes next in Iraq, but many Americans and some politicians appear even more unhappy now than they were on election day. Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) "I'd like to say that I believe conditions have improved. Certainly in Baghdad they have not." U.S. allies appear uncertain as well. We tell you what Saudi Arabia is telling the president. At home, uncertainty on the political front as a senator's illness throws political control into doubt. And another senator's ambitions throw the 2008 nomination battle into an uproar. Sen. Barack Obama exclaims, "This is our time." Plus, why elections matter. The lame duck job market: what happens when a party loses power? Covering these stories tonight, John Harwood of CNBC and the Wall Street Journal, Helene Cooper of the New York Times, Dan Balz of the Washington Post, and Alexis Simendinger of the National Journal.

In this rebroadcast of a stunning February 2006 NOW on PBS report, Larry Wilkerson, an administration insider who helped craft Secretary of State Colin Powell's landmark argument for war to the United Nations, claims he unwittingly "participated in a hoax." On Friday, December 22, 2006 at 8:30 p.m. on PBS (check local listings), NOW reports on the serious doubts that existed about the key evidence being used by the American government at the very time Powell's speech was being planned and delivered. "I recall vividly the Secretary of State walking into my office," Wilkerson told NOW. "And he said, looking out the window, just musing, 'I wonder what we'll do if we put half a million troops on the ground in Iraq -- and don't find a single weapon of mass destruction?'"

The urge to surge: how the war in Iraq is changing on the ground there and on the ground here, tonight on "Washington Week." Secretary Of Defense Robert Gates said, "What's the mission? What's the purpose? Can we do this? How big should an increase be?" This was the week where the discussion about troop surges in Iraq turned from whether to when. The president led the charge. President George Bush said, (From tape.) "We enter this New Year clear-eyed about the challenges in Iraq." And his generals obediently, if reluctantly, follow. General John Abizaid said, "The Baghdad security situation requires more Iraqi troops, and that's the direction that we're headed right now." So what happens next? Does the Israeli-Palestinian crisis move to the front burner? What about Iran? Syria? Also, presidential politics: who's in, who's out. And could you pick any of them out of a lineup? In 1926, just a few months before her death, Will Rogers described Annie Oakley as "the greatest woman rifle shot the world has ever produced." As the star attraction of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, she thrilled audiences around the world with her daring shooting feats and her act helped fuel turn-of-the-century nostalgia for the vanished, mythical world of the American West. Over time she became an American legend--the loud, brassy, cocksure shooter celebrated in the musical "Annie Get Your Gun." But that legend had little to do with the real Annie Oakley. Although famous as a Western sharpshooter, Oakley lived her entire life east of the Mississippi. A champion in a man's sport, she forever changed ideas about the abilities of women, yet she opposed female suffrage. Her fame and fortune came from her skill with guns, yet she was a Quaker. This probing AMERICAN EXPERIENCE production examines the dramatic life of a uniquely American icon whose complex character manifested many of the paradoxes of the nation.

"Spiral of Fire" takes author LeAnne Howe (Choctaw) to the North Carolina homeland of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to discover how their fusion of tourism, community, and cultural preservation is the key to the tribe's health in the 21st century. Along the way Howe seeks to reconcile her own identity as the daughter of a Cherokee father she never knew. Howe's journey of discovery leads her to one of the most beautiful places in America where Cherokees manage their own schools, hospitals, cable company, tourist attractions and multi-million dollar casino. Yet, despite these successes, diabetes is rampant, racism erodes self-confidence, and greed threatens to divide the community. "Spiral of Fire" reveals the forces at work to restore health to the tribe. Forces such as that of Joyce Dugan, former school superintendent and principal chief, who has been instrumental in cultural preservation efforts by leading the tribe to purchase Kituwah, the original "mother" town of the Cherokee. And Corey Blankenship, a student who led a campaign to convince legislators to pass a bill to allow a land exchange with the National Park Service that will provide a site for badly needed new schools. As well as James "Bo" Taylor, a young father who leads the movement to revitalize the Cherokee language, and traditional songs, dances and spirituality. Howe learns that a strong sense of community binds the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. Their strong sense of identity comes from knowing their history, strengths and weaknesses, and coming to terms with them. This realization encourages Howe's desire to accept her Cherokee identity and to forgive an absent father.

For the past few months, we've been watching the school system in New Orleans undergo an amazing comeback. But the story of what some call the most expansive charter school experiment in history is really about the children, parents and educators on the front line of the Big Easy's upheaval. On this week's broadcast and in a web-exclusive video profile, NOW takes a closer look at the New Orleans plan and some residents living at the tenuous crossroads of despair and hope. As a special extra, read NOW Producer Brian Epstein's essay about his experiences documenting this story and how a chance encounter affected his outlook. In this week of Thanksgiving, we give thanks to YOU for watching, downloading, and supporting our efforts to reconnect America to the ideals upon which it was founded. Now pass the cranberry sauce!

Life gets turned upside down for Kimberlee and Aimee Fung when their father decides to leave his well-paying corporate executive job in San Francisco and move the family to Bakersfield, CA. Moving in with grandparents and helping out with the family business, a massage parlor called "Touch of the Orient," add to the remodeling of their lives. If the social pressure of starting at a new high school in the middle of the school year weren't enough, Kimberlee and Aimee are among only a handful of Asian American kids at North High. They soon realize that every choice they make--from where to sit at lunch to what clubs to join-- will determine where and if they fit in.

This special telecast, hosted by Cuba Gooding, Jr., is a behind-the-scenes look at an extraordinary effort by the producers of SESAME STREET to help the approximately 700,000 children under the age of five who are waiting for a deployed mother or father to come home. What the producers discovered as they examined the effects of deployment on young American military families were stories of courage, hope and pride. This touching program is full of valuable information for parents in the military and those who care about them.
