the 1990s, the number of people in the world who are living in poverty has increased from 1.1 billion to 1.5 billion (World Bank 2000).

There are a number of reasons for this increase. One of the main reasons is the rapid population growth in the developing world. The number of people in the world is expected to reach 8 billion by the year 2025 (United Nations 2000). This increase in population will put a tremendous strain on the world's resources, particularly in the developing world.

Another reason for the increase in poverty is the rapid technological change in the developed world. The developed world has experienced a rapid increase in technological change, which has led to a rapid increase in productivity and income. However, the developing world has not experienced the same rapid technological change, which has led to a slower increase in productivity and income.

Finally, the rapid technological change in the developed world has led to a rapid increase in the demand for skilled labour. The developing world has a large population of unskilled labour, which is not in demand in the developed world. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to find work, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for capital. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford capital, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for energy. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford energy, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for land. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford land, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for water. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford water, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for food. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford food, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.

The rapid technological change in the developed world has also led to a rapid increase in the demand for housing. The developing world has a large population of people who are unable to afford housing, which is necessary for them to participate in the global economy. This has led to a large number of people in the developing world who are unable to participate in the global economy, and who are therefore living in poverty.
