On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:
Immigration has been in the spotlight over the past year, as thousands of asylum seekers arrived in New York. The Legislature has also considered more support for immigrants in New York. Murad Awawdeh from the New York Immigration Coalition joins us to discuss. Having a disability can make finding a job, and maintaining it, difficult at times. But it doesn't have to be. WMHT's Catherine Rafferty explains in a new story. An update on an interview from a few weeks ago on New York's physician assistants.

On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

How well do you know New York's state government, and how it affects your life? We'll tell you how it all works, soup to nuts.

The state Legislature is often the target of criticism related to transparency. Sen. Jim Tedisco, R-Saratoga County, chats with us about a bill he says would make both chambers more transparent and accountable to the public.

Plus, heavy rain causes flooding around the state, and the state's Office for the Aging holds a town hall. More on that.

On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

Thousands of migrants seeking asylum have traveled to New York over the past few years in an effort to restart their lives.

But that influx has overwhelmed officials in New York City and state government, who've struggled to house and provide basic necessities for those migrants.

We'll give you a full explainer on the state's role in immigration, and what makes asylum seekers different than refugees and other immigrants.

Then, Dr. Dina Refki from the SUNY Institute on Immigrant Integration Research and Policy and Murad Awawdeh from the New York Immigration Coalition join us with their take on immigration in New York today, including how the influx of asylum seekers has been handled.

On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

July is Disability Pride Month, marking the passage of the Americans With Disabilities Act in 1990. We speak with New York's Chief Disability Officer, Kimberly Hill, about how the state can become more accessible for people with disabilities.

Ever since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the landmark Roe v. Wade ruling last year, there's been a lot of confusion and misinformation about how laws on abortion work, and who can change them. We break it all down in a new installment of NY&, our civics series.

An update on the 9/11 Notice Act in a new On The Bill segment.

How will New York spend the $4.2 billion that voters authorized it to borrow last year, to adapt to climate change? And is New York taking your gas stove away? We'll answer those questions with DEC Commissioner Basil Seggos and NYSERDA President & CEO Doreen Harris.

A new installment of our segment New York By The Numbers, which uses a number to tell about something in New York you might not know about. This week's number is 13.8, and deals with access to high-speed internet in New York.

Gov. Hochul and New York City Mayor Eric Adams team up for an announcement on public safety in New York City. We'll have details.

Plus, what's next for mental health in New York's schools? New funding is available.

New York’s influx of asylum seekers continues, with more being transported upstate this week. A few weeks ago, we brought you a special discussion on the situation. This week, we speak with Assemblymember Angelo Santabarbara, D-Schenectady, about a bill he’s introduced that he says would help better organize the process.

Concerns over the integrity of elections began to pop up during, and after, the 2020 election, including in New York. So, how confident should you be in New York’s elections, and voting? We’ll explain the entire process, and how your vote is protected, in a new installment of NY&.

The state Legislature in New York has passed a bill that would ban wildlife killing contests in the state, sparking some controversy and misinformation. We'll break down the bill with Brian Shapiro, the New York state director at the Humane Society of the United States. Lawmakers also considered legislation related to health insurance and health care this year, while insurance companies propose higher rates for consumers. We'll discuss that and more with Eric Linzer, president and CEO of the New York Health Plan Association.

New York — and the rest of the country — is experiencing a mental health crisis, with a huge demand in services and a system that can't keep up.

We speak with Dr. Ann Marie Sullivan, commissioner of the state Office of Mental Health, about what the state's doing, the challenges that still exist, and what someone should do if they're struggling with their mental health.

Suicide prevention is key, but often overlooked in certain demographics. We'll tell you more.

Dan Egan from the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (Capital Region Chair) talks through mental health in New York today, and how more lives could be saved.
