Program Description: On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

The Legislature had the week off, but Assembly Republican Leader Will Barclay joins us to chat about the latest out of Albany.

A few updates from the State Capitol around underreported health care policy and spending in the State Budget.

Jacqueline Franchetti lost her daughter Kyra in 2016. Now, she's pushing "Kyra's Law" in Albany in hopes of preventing another tragedy. Alexis Young has that story.

Program Description: On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

Gov. Kathy Hochul is proposing the New York Housing Compact: a plan to build 800,000 new homes in New York over the next decade. But some local leaders have expressed concerns, and there's some confusion about how it would work. State Housing Commissioner RuthAnne Visnauskas joins us to break down the proposal. As New York emerges from the pandemic, connecting people with jobs will be vital to the state's recovery, economic experts say. We take you inside a jobs training program that's charting a new path for some workers. We've got a few updates from the State Capitol, including new polling on Gov. Kathy Hochul's 2023 agenda, and more.

Program Description: On This Week's Edition of New York NOW:

The State Senate and Assembly approved their one-house budget proposals this week in a statutory rebuttal to Gov. Hochul's spending plan.

Assembly Speaker Carl Heastie joins us to discuss that chamber's budget, and what's ahead in negotiations. New York's paid family leave law was considered among the country's most generous when it became law in 2016. But parents who've lost their children at birth say there's a glaring gap in coverage. Alexis Young reports.
