Poverty	Susan Chidley and a few Nicaraguan colleagues created Children Without Shoes International. The people on the ground in Nicaragua felt that the most pressing needs for the children in the rural villages were shoes and school uniforms, which are required to attend public schools. When kids don't have shoes or school uniforms, they are ostracized for being poor and are also at a high risk for injuries and foot problems/diseases, such as worms. Sometimes they aren't even allowed to attend school at all. The roads are dirt and covered in trash and broken glass, and shoes are necessary to avoid getting cuts and thus infections, which they also don't have the resources to treat and can lead to death. Shoes can mean the difference between getting an education and not, and can help break the cycle of poverty.	3/19/2018	6:18 AM	6:51
