While Bernalillo County periodically holds hiring events, they have a new event format that includes weekly information sessions. MDC Communications Specialist Candace Hopkins and Corrections officer Ashley Williams discuss these hiring events and what they will entail. During these two-hour weekly information sessions, those who are interested in learning more about the jail and corrections staff can talk with MDC staff and learn additional information. The sessions will be held at various locations around Albuquerque and the corrections officers who will be answering attendees' questions will have about 30 years of combined experience.

Each year they host an event called Winter Warm-Up: Gloves for Terrie is an event that will help to distribute warm clothing and food for those in need. Community advocate Chantelle Martinez discusses the upcoming event and how you can help those in need this holiday season.

The group appoints advocates to cases where children have been abused and neglected. Advocates work the child's teachers and gathers information to report back to the team at CYFD. This helps target what the child needs. National CASA reports that children with a child advocate are more likely to receive therapy, health care and education,

There are 1,126 kids in Bernalillo foster care and this year New Mexico Kids Matter was only able to serve 250 children. The rate of domestic violence case dismissals in New Mexico is approximately 80% while average conviction rates are less than 10%. The concerning statistics have some worried about the lack of accountability and an increase in violence. The executive director of New Mexico Coalition Against Domestic Violence, Pamela Wiseman discusses the organization's ideas to improve those statistics. While the state of New Mexico is providing funding for services to prevent domestic violence, statistics show that rates are not going down. "We are seeing an increase and the Legislative Finance Committee put out a report in which they said violence is not going down despite the fact the state is providing some funding for services. But what we want people to know is that the programs in New Mexico cannot by themselves reduce violence," said Wiseman.
