about recovery spending under his watch.

Bipartisan groups of state lawmakers sought more authority over the spending and more ability to determine how remaining dollars should be divided up, but those efforts were defeated amid opposition from Jindal.

Lawmakers on a hurricane recovery committee have repeatedly sought plans to redirect money that hasn't been used. Sen. Ed Murray, D-New Orleans and the committee chairman, said he's concerned that Congress could seek to reclaim the block grant aid if it remains unused too long.

"There are an awful lot of things that need to get done, and the money has been sitting there for a long time not spent," Murray said. "They have been very, very slow to redirect the money."

Of the recovery cash remaining, about $640 million is earmarked to local com-block grant aid.

But Forbes said he expects much of that money to be pushed out within the next two to three years, and the state put construction deadlines in place to speed the efforts.

Sen. Norby Chabert, R-Houma, said he's grateful the state still has recovery money rather than spending it all too quickly, before the full scope of damage and rebuilding needs were clear. Chabert represents part of coastal southeastern Louisiana, including Terrebonne Parish, which was hit by all four hurricanes.

"In many ways, you've got to complete the preliminary recovery things to find out what else you really need, and I kind of think that that's where we've been," he said. "It's not that bad to have some extra money sitting on the sidelines. The needs are great and still out there."

The Jindal administration intends to use much of the $140 million left in the

Some rebuilt only to run in problems with Chinese di wall. Other homeowners had their Road Home check a had it seized by the bank pay off a mortgage.

"Our objective obvious is to get every single resident who wants to come back in their home," Forbes said.

In recent years, the Jindal administration also has redirected some recovery money — with federal approval — to the state's preschool program for at-risk children, upgrades the New Orleans Superdome and economic development incentive package.

But Forbes said he doesn't think the state is at risk of losing its recovery block grant money even though the state is years behind in moving from the storms. He said 98 percent of the money is allocated to programs that are paying out dollars each month to recover needs.
