The 8th Day: Tyler Young Talks 2020-2021 Sports Recap And COVID-19 On The 8th Day

Coverage:

Todd Pazz of The 8th Day sat with mediaBrew's Tyler Young to wrap up the 2020-2021 sports season. They also touched on the difficulties during the abbreviated seasons, and the obstacles Tyler faced calling games without a studio producer.

Due to the coronavirus pandemic mediaBrew was short staffed for the 2020-2021 sports seasons. That meant that Tyler, who calls the games for Ishpeming High School regularly, had to essentially pull double-duty. He was responsible for getting himself on and off air along with making sure all of his ad spots were being played.

He explained that is usual routine of calling games would become interrupted when faced with the challenge of going completely solo. Admittedly there were mistakes made, however small, sometimes would ruin the flow of the broadcast. Then again, that's live radio and you have to sometimes just roll with it.

Some of the other pressures Tyler and other broadcasters faced were the uncertainty of the schedules. Games could be added or cancelled at the drop of a hat. During the season mediaBrew was able to find more studio producers, and make the broadcaster's lives a little bit easier.

The extremely compressed training process of studio producers was touched on briefly. Tyler was happy that, even though the training time was short, things ran smooth during broadcasts.

Todd asked about Tyler's thoughts on how he thought the seasons went considering the difficulties broadcasters faced. "It went pretty well. There weren't any major shutdowns due to covid. There were a couple of schools that had issues, but really we didn't see it. Especially around the teams that we cover." He did bring up that the only real team interruption he saw was with the Ishpeming boys basketball team. They had to end their season early, because they faced a team who had an athlete with a pending test that later became positive. While waiting on results the athlete had competed against Ishpeming. Which meant, due to protocols Ishpeming had to quarantine which cut their season short.

Tyler also talked about teams purposely cutting the last game out of their season. He brought up Marquette dropping the last game of the season. The final game didn't effect playoff seeding and was basically an exhibition game. Both Marquette and their opponent decided to forgo the game to avoid potential exposure. Which would lead to the inability for either team to play in the playoffs. There were multiple U.P. schools who did the same thing leading to the postseason.

Todd brought up a general discussion about vaccines and getting vaccinated. Tyler mentioned that he had to prove vaccination as a college student to be able to use certain amenities on campus. They talked about the public perception about vaccines, along with their own personal opinions on the topic.

They both expressed their views on the importance of knowledge about the vaccine at the community level. Tyler brought up the point that the vaccine conversation is an uncomfortable one. However, it's a topic that needs to be discussed. Without knowledge on the issue it has the chance to continue effect, not only everyday life, but on the schools and school athletics. Tyler really reinforced the mantra, "think globally, act locally." When we think big and act in a more intimate way with our communities it can only to be beneficial to one another.

Todd brought up the importance to keeping a broad horizon. Not only listening to what we want to hear, but how important it is to take in the information you don't want to hear and listen to everyone. He explains it's important to do what makes sense, not just want you do or don't want to do.

They eventually got back on the sports track, and brought up how football is looking for the 2021 season. Tyler talked about how Ishpeming didn't field a varsity team this year, and that he doesn't believe it was covid related. The JV team played three games and did well. He believes the Hemittites will field a pretty decent varsity team this year.

Tyler touched on his favorite soccer team, AFC Wimbledon. They aren't having the greatest season as of now, but Tyler is holding out hope that they can turn it around for the last part of the season.

Todd got back on the vaccine talk and the importance of getting vaccinated. Not only against COVID-19, but against all other major diseases and viruses. They reminisced about life pre-covid, specifically going to the movies. Tyler brought up the feeling of going to a packed theater on opening day of a highly anticipated movie, and how he can't wait to get back to that. Todd mentioned a couple of "older" movies, dating himself a bit, and the lines that would go all the way outside and around the corner. They are both hopeful to get back to that feeling and experience.

The 8th Day: Governor Gretchen Whitmer Updates On Vaccine Distribution and Rising Cases in Michigan

Coverage:

Today Governor Whitmer held another press conference to discuss Michigan's ongoing vaccination efforts and the recent rise in cases and the other coronavirus variants. The governor was of course joined by Dr. Khaldun. Take a listen to the entire conference below, or keep reading for quick highlights on the conference. Governor Whitmer started by updating on the fact that nearly 40% of Michigan is vaccinated and vaccine distribution is spreading up. That's about 5 million doses in less than four months. The Governor goes on to say the Johnson and ; Johnson one-shot vaccine is critical for younger Michiganders and those who might have trouble coming back in for a second shot. She goes on to urge Michiganders to get vaccinated to stop the rise in cases and the surge in the different coronavirus variants. She also asks everyone to stop dining indoors for two weeks, and instead sit in outdoor dining areas or order take out or delivery.

The 8th Day: Governor Whitmer Holds Coronavirus Press Conference

Coverage:

Governor Gretchen Whitmer held a coronavirus press conference. She discussed cases in Michigan and updated on vaccine distribution in the state. Gretchen Whitmer: All right, hello. Good afternoon. It is Wednesday, April 14th. I am joined by of course Dr. J and Dr. Adnan Munkarah from Henry Ford Health System, the chief clinical officer. Today, we're going to discuss Michigan's ongoing vaccination efforts and talk through additional steps we're taking to surge shots and save lives. Michigan has administered over 5.4 million doses of the safe effect of COVID-19 vaccines to over 3.4 million Michiganders. Over 192 million doses of the safe, effective COVID vaccines have been administered across the country and we're on our way toward doubling President Biden's goal of 100 million shots in 100 days. 41.9% of Michiganders 16 and up have gotten their first dose and 27.5% are fully vaccinated, including 61% of seniors. Our vaccine response is a testament to what we can do if we work together. I want to thank the frontline healthcare professionals who are working around the clock to keep our communities safe. Now I'd like to discuss steps we can take to keep each other safe and help our healthcare professionals do their jobs. Right now, we've got some work to do to get our COVID metrics headed in the right direction again. Cases are continuing to rise. Our test positivity rate is hovering around 18%. Two dozen hospitals are at 90% capacity or higher. We have a tough couple of weeks ahead of us as more effectious B117 COVID variant continues spreading. So to slow the spread, we all have to do our part and double down on what we know works masks, distancing, hand-washing. I also want to stress that we still have public health laws in place to mitigate the spread of COVID, including a mask mandate, capacity limits on indoor gatherings, and mandatory testing for sports. These are some of the strongest public health laws in the Midwest. The most important thing you can do of course is to get vaccinated. The safe, effective COVID-19 vaccines are the most effective way to keep yourself and your family safe and help us return to normal. Just yesterday, the CEO of Pfizer said they are upping their COVID vaccine output by 10%. This is great news and it demonstrates the hard work and ingenuity of Michigan workers who are making the lifesaving Pfizer vaccine in Portage, Michigan. If we all do our part, I know we can slow the spread and put this pandemic behind us, but we also must find ways to keep people safe and out of the hospital. Today, we're here to discuss promising therapeutic treatments that are available to help those diagnosed with COVID-19 to avoid serious symptoms and to stay out of the hospital as we're facing this surge. Last Friday, April 9th, the National Institutes of Health COVID-19 Treatments Guidelines Panel said they strongly recommend that Regeneron's COVID 19 treatment should be used in COVID-19 positive patients who are at high risk of clinical progression. The NIH's guidance was backed by data from a study of 4,500 patients showing that Regeneron's COVID treatment significantly reduced the risk of hospitalization and death. Regeneron and other therapeutics from Eli Lilly have already been granted emergency use authorization by the FDA, the exact same authorization given to the vaccines. So both treatments were granted this authorization back in November of last year. Regeneron and Eli Lilly offer a promising treatment for some people who have tested positive for COVID. Current data suggests both are likely effective against B117 variant, which is now the most common variant in the country. Notably, Regeneron was administered to President Trump late last year after he had COVID-19 and faced harsh symptoms. Regeneron's treatment very likely helped save the former president's life. It could save yours too. We are using every mitigation strategy, every medication, and every treatment option to help fight the virus here in Michigan. These treatments can be effective in preventing hospitalizations and deaths for those diagnosed with COVID. And we are ensuring providers across the state have the supplies they need to effectively treat Michiganders. They are another tool in our toolbox as we work hard to save lives. So how did you get it and who can get it? Well, Regeneron and Eli Lilly are monoclonal antibody treatments that are administered via infusion through an IV. In just a few moments, we will have Dr.

Khaldun talk more about the science behind these treatments. So far, more than 6,600 Michiganders have received these treatments since they were approved for emergency use by the FDA in November, and 65% of patients report feeling better within two days, and less than 5% require hospitalization following the treatment. Currently, people with pre-existing or underlying health risks qualify to receive these therapeutic antibody treatments. This includes all seniors, anyone with high blood pressure, asthma, lung issues, heart issues, cancer, or anyone who is immunocompromised. Ideally, both monoclonal antibody infusions should be administered as soon as possible after a qualifying patient tests positive for COVID-19. So if you are diagnosed with COVID, talk to a physician to see if you are eligible for this treatment. Time is of the essence with these therapeutics. The sooner you received them after you test positive, the more effective they will be. If you don't have insurance, this treatment is still available to you. We're proud to be removing this barrier right from the beginning to accessing this lifesaving care. I want to reiterate that COVID-19 vaccines are also free for all Michiganders. Regeneron and Eli Lilly antibody treatments can help keep you out of the hospital. They have also been shown to reduce the risk of symptomatic infection, meaning they could stop you from spreading COVID too. Approximately 30% of Michiganders were seen get diagnosed every day would qualify for these lifesaving therapeutics. In Michigan, we're seeing spreading awareness of these treatments and taking steps to make them available to all Michiganders where they are at no cost. Currently, both Regeneron and Eli Lilly treatments are available at a few hospitals in Michigan. We're engaging with our federal partners to expand supply at centers that currently administer these treatments and also working to stand up additional sites where they can be accessed. We know that as awareness increases, more people will take it and we will. And as awareness increases, more people will take it. And we want to make sure we have the capacity to keep up with demand. The federal government has made therapeutic treatments free for all Americans who are eligible. There are currently still some administrative costs if you get this treatment, but we are working with the federal government and healthcare providers to get these costs waived. I want you to know that we are doing everything we can to make this therapy available to everyone who qualifies for free as quickly as possible. However, I do want to be very clear. Therapeutics are another tool, but they are not a substitute for vaccination. These treatments for folks with underlying health conditions who have COVID can help them avoid hospitalization and stop the spread temporarily. A Michigander who receives therapeutic treatment is eligible to receive COVID vaccine 90 days after administration. And the vaccine is still the most effective way to protect you and your family from COVID. And I encourage all Michiganders 16 and up to get it. And we will help everyone who receives this treatment schedule their vaccine appointment when they are eligible for that as well. In addition to these therapeutics, we're working with the federal government to bring in additional doses of remdesivir, a drug that will shorten hospital stays and save more lives. Remdesivir was approved by the FDA for emergency use authorization in May of last year. The drug is used for people hospitalized, experiencing severe COVID symptoms. Severe symptoms include patients with low blood oxygen levels, need an oxygen therapy, or those needing more intensive breathing support such as a ventilator. In a clinical trial, remdesivir was shown to reduce recovery time for patients with severe symptoms. This is yet another tool in the toolbox that we can use to keep people safe and move them safely out of the hospital. As always, we remain laser focused on keeping people safe, rebuilding our economy, and getting back to normal. Now, we have found more tools in our toolbox. Antibody infusions and drug therapy. If you, a loved one, a neighbor, or a friend is diagnosed with COVID-19 and are eligible because of your age or pre-existing conditions, I encourage you to ask your doctor for therapeutic options as quickly as possible. I also encourage you to go to michigan.gov/covidtherapy to find a site administering the antibiotic treatments near you. The treatments offered by Regeneron or Eli Lilly could keep you out of the hospital and save your life, and drugs like remdesivir can limit the number of days you stay in the hospital. I'm going to shoot straight with you as I always have. We're in a tough spot, Michigan. And while we appreciate the support we've received from the federal government, I will not stop fighting for more tests, more vaccines, more ways to keep you and your family safe. Over the past year, Michigan has been one of the most proactive states. We took this seriously from the start and consistently led with science and data. I know how hard this year has been on all of us. I know we're all feeling pandemic fatigue, but we got to remember we're in this together. It's going to take hard work to beat this virus, but Michiganders are used to hard work and we can beat this virus together. So I'm calling on Michiganders to continue their professional, their personal efforts, to slow the spread by masking up, social distancing and washing your hands. And of course get vaccinated to keep you and your family safe and help us return to normal sooner.

Gretchen Whitmer: Now I'm going to turn it over to Dr. J. Dr. J: Thank you governor. So I continue to be incredibly concerned about our state's COVID-19 data. This week, we surpassed the COVID 19 case and hospitalization rates that we saw in the fall. Right now, Michigan has 574 cases per million people, five times where we were in mid February and data indicates we have broad community spread. The percent of tests that are coming back positive is around 18%, five times where we were in the middle of February. MDHHS is tracking about 1,152 outbreaks in counties across the state, including new outbreaks in K-12 schools, manufacturing, and construction, long-term care, childcare, retail, restaurants, and bars. Since January, we've identified 291 clusters associated with youth sports teams. Since last week, we've also seen 52 new outbreaks in restaurant and retail settings. Our lab has identified 2,753 variant cases in 62 counties across the state. And because of this sharp rise in cases overall, there are likely many more that we do not yet know about, which makes the risk of contracting COVID even greater. Hospitalizations are also still increasing with many facilities continuing to report that they are at or near capacity. Over 18% of hospital beds are being used to treat COVID-19 patients. So I worked in the emergency department this past weekend, and I'll tell you, it was exhausting. We are seeing more and more people who are being diagnosed with COVID-19. Many of them are younger than what we were seeing with previous surges. We're trying to take care of both patients with COVID-19 and those were coming in for other medical issues. And it is really putting a strain on our staff and our resources, and our bed space. All of which are spread way too thin. Patients are again lining our hallways like they were last spring. This situation is very serious. We need to be using every tool in our toolbox right now to get these cases and hospitalizations down. Again, just because something is open and legal, it does not mean that you should be doing it. We have learned so much about this virus over the past 15 months. Masks work. Wear one properly over your nose and your mouth anytime you're going to be around someone outside of your household. Large gatherings are riskier, particularly if it is indoors and people are not distanced apart appropriately. Sitting in an indoor space, like a restaurant where there's less ventilation and people are talking with their mask off is simply not a safe thing to do right now. If you are sick, stay home and get tested. Get tested if you've been exposed, or if you've recently traveled. And importantly, as the governor said, get vaccinated as soon as you are able. I also want to talk a little bit about yesterday's announcement from the CDC and the FDA recommending a pause on the Johnson and ; Johnson vaccine. So as of April 12th, 6.8 million doses of the Johnson and ; Johnson vaccine have been administered across the country, including a little over 209,000 here in the state of Michigan. Of that 6.8 million, the CDC received reports of six cases of a where condition called cerebral venous sinus thrombosis, essentially a blood clot in the blood vessels around the brain, in combination with something called thrombocytopenia, which is a low blood platelet count. While these events are very rare, out of an abundance of caution, the CDC and FDA made a recommendation for states to pause on giving additional doses of the Johnson and ; Johnson vaccine while they're able to look at the data on those six cases more closely, which they are doing today, and we'll be doing over the next several days. This proves that our monitoring system for these vaccines is robust and it works. And just six cases out of 6.8 million doses, that's about one in a million, means that this reaction is incredibly rare. Your risk of getting COVID if you are not vaccinated is much higher than your risk of getting an adverse reaction to this vaccine. While we await more information from the CDC on Johnson and ; Johnson, we still want people to schedule their appointments for the safe and effective Pfizer and Moderna vaccines. And if you have received the

Johnson and ; Johnson vaccine in the past three weeks, contact your healthcare provider if you develop symptoms of a blood clot, such as a severe headache or abdominal pain, leg pain, or shortness of breath. Again, these reactions were incredibly rare, just six cases out of 6.8 million. And while the CDC and FDA proceed with their thorough analysis of these cases and work to provide us with more information, the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines are still safe and effective, and the path forward to ending this pandemic. As the governor mentioned, we have now over 5.4 million doses of the COVID-19 vaccines administered in the state. About 42% of Michigan residents over the age of 16 have had at least one dose. Let's continue to focus on achieving our goal of getting at least 70% of Michiganders age 16 and up vaccinated as quickly as possible. And remember, there is so much you can do once you're vaccinated. Gathering with others in your home who are fully vaccinated without mask, traveling without testing if you don't have symptoms, not needing to quarantine if you are exposed. Vaccines give you the freedom and the peace of mind that your risk of COVID is low. Another very, very important tool that we are excited to talk about today that the governor mentioned are COVID-19 therapeutic medications. Therapeutic medications can potentially prevent high-risk people who have COVID-19 from needing to be hospitalized. It can shorten the number of days that you need to stay in the hospital, and it could even prevent deaths. Monoclonal antibodies, like the one made by Eli Lilly and the one by Regeneron, have been authorized by the FDA for use in some high-risk patients over the age of 12 with COVID-19 who do not need to be admitted to the hospital. Data from early trials suggest a 70% reduction in hospitalizations or death in high-risk patients treated with these monoclonal antibodies. To date, over 6,600 patients have been treated with this therapy across the state. That includes a one-time IV infusion. That takes as little as 21 minutes. Our preliminary data from Michigan shows that 94% of people who received this reported no side effects, and the 6% who did reported mild side effects like headache, fever, or myalgias that went away. No one who received these medications thus far had a severe allergic reaction, and there was a very low rate of hospital admissions for those who did receive it. Now, for those who are hospitalized with COVID-19, we have another therapeutic medication as the governor mentioned called remdesivir, that studies show may cut down on the length of time that someone may need to stay in the hospital. And that is so important now more than ever, especially with our COVID-19 hospitalization rates what they are. Thousands of people across the state have already received this medication. Our work on therapeutics led by Dr. Bill Fales, our MD, HHS, EMS medical director has been recognized by the Biden administration as leading the way in getting these therapies into our communities, including long-term care settings for homebound individuals and across hospitals and healthcare systems. We are working with the federal government to establish even more access points, and to make sure everyone who is eligible for these medications in Michigan can get them. So if you test positive for COVID-19, you should ask your doctor if you qualify for these therapies, and ask them where you can find them. It's important that you get this medication as soon as you can after you get your positive test result. You only qualify if it's within 10 days of developing symptoms, and the sooner, the better. You can go to our website, michigan.gov/covidtherapy, to find out more. There are over 70 sites that are providing these monoclonal antibodies in at least 37 counties across the state. For all clinicians, it's on us to know that these therapeutics exist, and we should be proactive in identifying the appropriate patients and helping to get them access. As an ER doctor, I use remdesivir for my patients who need to be admitted to the hospital, and I screen my COVID-positive patients for whether or not they qualify for monoclonal antibodies, and I'm asking every doctor in Michigan to do the same. Dr. J: So the past 14 months has been very challenging, and especially the past couple of months in Michigan as our cases have climbed, but I still have hope. We know what to do. We just all have to come together and do it. And with that, I will turn it over to Dr. Munkarah. Dr. Munkarah: Thank you. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to you today. Over the last 14 months, this pandemic has affected all of us in many ways. The surge we are seeing now is very troublesome. Over the past five weeks at Henry Ford Hospitals, we have seen our patients with COVID increased from 75 patients at the beginning of March to 550 patients as of this morning. This is almost a six-fold increase in the number of patients within four weeks. Our test positivity rate has gone up from 1 in 25 patients testing positive to 1 in 4 patients testing positive through our outpatients as well as our emergency department. This is extremely troubling. Throughout the pandemic, we have participated in multiple clinical trials and studies to test the effectiveness of treatments for COVID-19. We can attest to the success of monoclonal antibodies that the governor and Dr. Khaldun have talked about. We began using these monoclonal antibodies in December of 2020. We have so far administered over 800 infusion throughout our six sites of infusion. The therapy has been shown to help COVID-19 patients who are at risk of developing severe disease and potentially die. It also reduces hospitalization of COVID-19 patient, therefore easing the burden on our hospitals and caregivers. We are eager to continue leading this effort, and are working closely with our partners in the state and the federal government to expand the use of monoclonal antibodies as the governor and Dr. Khaldun had mentioned. We are finalizing details for expansion plans, and we'll be sharing those in the coming couple of days. Even with treatment breaks like this one, we need everyone's help. Families continue to lose their loved ones to COVID-19, or struggle to cope with loved ones who are getting very sick and hospitalized. Our care teams are emotionally and physically exhausted. Dr. Munkarah: They are more than committed and dedicated to provide the best care. However, they are frustrated to see people coming in very sick and die of an infection that we can control. The most important thing that we can do is to get vaccinated. We know that some people are hesitant. Even with the current pause and planned review of the use of Johnson and ; Johnson vaccine, we have two other vaccines, Moderna and Pfizer, both of which are safe and effective. I and all my eligible family members have received the vaccine. We also need everyone to continue a good faith effort to practice the safety measures we have in place. They are simple, they work, and they save lives. Wear your mask, practice social distancing, avoid large gatherings, and wash your hands regularly. We know you have heard this over and over again, and you might be getting fatigued with that, but if we all truly do our part, we can end this pandemic together. Thank you. Gretchen Whitmer: Thank you, Dr. Munkarah. Appreciate your joining us today and the work that you're doing every single day at Henry Ford, and we really are so grateful. So with that, I know we've got time for a few questions today. I understand we've got a little technical issue, so I'm going to call on a handful of reporters that are in the queue that my team tells me are ready to ask a few questions. So we'll start with Kyle M. Kyle M.: Thank you, Governor. During this pandemic, Michigan residents have been told to stay home, limit their travel, do Zoom Thanksgivings, and limit their activities per your office's request [inaudible 00:26:41] COVID spread, yet your head of the DHHS traveled to Alabama last week with COVID [inaudible 00:26:46] reaching pandemic highs. How do you justify this to residents who may feel that there may be two sets of rules in play here? Gretchen Whitmer: Well, I think first and foremost, let me say this. I'm not going to get distracted by partisan hit jobs on my team. Gretchen Whitmer: €| Distracted by partisan hit jobs on my team. There have never been travel restrictions in Michigan. There just haven't been. What we have done is to ask people to be smart, to get vaccinated, to mask up. That is the key to traveling with confidence that you're going to be safe and not expose yourself or your loved ones to COVID or your community to COVID. So what directors do on their personal time is their business, so long as they are safe, which is what we're asking everyone in the state to do. Get vaccinated, mask up. If we all want the freedom to do these things that we're longing to do, that is the key to doing it with confidence that we're going to be safe, and we're not going to expose anyone else to COVID. So, go get your vaccine is my strongest response to everyone who's watching. That's the crucial component to us getting through this moment. And that's exactly what we are promoting within state government and across the state. All right, Dave B. is up next. Dave: Hi governor, thank you for taking my question. Earlier, Dr. Khaldun, I believe said, quote, We need to be using every tool in our toolbox right now to get these cases and hospitalizations down. If that's the case, why don't you think it's important for yourself, for the Health Department, to issue new restrictions or regulations on businesses, gatherings, or restaurants? Gretchen Whitmer: Well at this juncture, we know that the tools at our disposal that can most dramatically improve outcomes for people in this state are vaccines, and that's why we're moving so swiftly to get people vaccinated, over 5.4 million shots in arms. This is no small feat, a million in just the last two weeks. We are really moving quickly on that, and it's going to be incumbent on all of us to encourage our neighbors, our loved ones, our friends, our coworkers, to get vaccinated. This monoclonal antibodies is an incredible treatment that has recently been endorsed by the NIH that we want to deploy in Michigan. It's no substitute for a vaccine, so number one tool we have is vaccine. Number two tool we have is masking, both of those together are important. But if you get COVID, because we know that we've got a high percentage right now, a monoclonal antibody, if you are someone that qualifies for it, can be a lifesaver and it can keep you out of the hospital. And that's what we're trying to do, is get our hospital rates down. Gretchen Whitmer: We know a lot more about our common enemy than we did a year ago. We know that masking up is crucial. We know that social distancing is crucial. We're asking everyone in Michigan to do their part, utilize this knowledge to keep yourself safe, to keep our communities safe. My personal recommendation is don't eat inside of a restaurant. Give your favorite restaurant, your business, sit in the outdoor area or get takeout.

The 8th Day: Joe Esbrook Talks About Marquette Builder's Labor Shortage and How To Become A Builder

Coverage:

Joe Esbrook, the Chief Executive Officer of Hiawatha Log Homes, joined the the 8th Day talking about his time with the Home Builders Association and the labor issues of the building industry. With starting wages easily reaching $18/hr, it seems wild that even entry-level jobs aren't filling up. While business is going well for many builders in the U.P, employers face a grave labor problem. They can't find the laborers to fill the jobs, and many attribute this problem to the many consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic and unemployment issues throughout the nation. However, Joe comments that he believes the problem was happening even before the pandemic came to the United States, "You've got 77 million baby boomers retiring, and only about half that to fill their jobs. There's just not enough bodies to fill those extra vacancies." The Hiawatha Log Houses booth at the Home and ; Garden Show [caption] Hope isn't lost for this vital industry, however. Organizations in the area are working together with local schools to present the opportunities and benefits a vocational job can provide. Joe boasts the rare benefit of getting paid while training. "We're willing to train ya! So come on in, give us a chance." The Home Builders Association and Michigan Works! are great places to start on the path toward working as a builder. The 8th Day: Project Jade Talks About Autism and Support for the Marquette Community

Coverage:

While visiting the Home and ; Garden Show, Todd Pazz of the 8th Day, had the delight to speak with Megan Iwanski, a member of Project Jade. She was enthusiastic about introducing their project and sharing the prizes available at their booth. Project Jade, a pronounced Facebook group with nearly 700 members, is fundraising around the community to help fund communication boards for special needs students in the Upper Peninsula. The organization's name was inspired by a young girl named Jade, who is growing up with autism. She boasts a colorful personality, loves to be outside, and is creatively artistic. Communication boards provide a way for non-verbal persons on the spectrum to speak with their peers. They provide a series of pictures for non-verbal people to point at. That way they can clearly illustrate their thoughts and feelings with others. These tools are extremely helpful to those on the spectrum who cannot voice their needs. With more availability of these communication boards, those who need them can become more adept at using them. These boards can be useful for all peoples in the Marquette area as an educational and communication tool. Project Jade hosted a booth at the Home and ; Garden Show, sponsoring a raffle with various prizes, including children's books, blankets, sweets, and wine.

The 8th Day: What is the Home Builders Association? President Dave Martin Answers

Coverage:

This year's Home and ; Garden show bustled with trade talk and business, with a great turnout as the 2020 pandemic finally wanes in the Upper Peninsula. The 8th Day interviewed Dave Martin. Dave is the President of the Home Builders Association in the Upper Peninsula, a part of the Home and ; Garden Committee, and owner of the Window Store in Marquette. Dave talked about the Home and ; Builders Association, also known as HBA, and what it can do for the Upper Peninsula. "The mission of the association has been the same all along: to support the building industry." When pressed about the state of the business in the aftermath of Covid-19, Dave confidently revealed that business is booming. However, not everything is sunshine and roses in the building industry. The National Association of Home Builders reports that the increase of lumber prices alone has increased home building costs by about $25,000. Is there a real shortage? Is this the law of supply and demand in effect? Dave suggests: "I think it's part of it, but I think a major part of the loss of products is loss of labor. No one can find labor. It's a nationwide problem." Dave attributes the building industry's labor problems to several things, but the solution is plain. The industry needs workers. The building industry boasts good-paying jobs. Dave suggests that starting wages can easily be $18 an hour with good benefits. Owners are looking at the HBA's list of job applicants all the time, and trying to fill their openings. The HBA boasts over 200 licensed and insured members across the Upper Peninsula. The HBA also helps provide that information, ensuring that the public has the knowledge and access to licensed and insured contractors in the area. The local HBA offices are open and available for submitting applications for jobs in this field. Their office can be found at 307 S Front St. near Getz's and ; Towner's Pastry.

The Sunny Morning Show: Governor Gretchen Whitmer Outlines Plan To Lift COVID-19 Restrictions In Michigan

Coverage:

Governor Gretchen Whitmer has defined a plan to roll back COVID-19 restrictions based on the percentage of Michigan's adult population that is vaccinated.

Whitmer spoke about the main points of the plan, and the metrics it will follow, at a press conference in Lansing today.

Under the plan, two weeks after 55% of Michiganders over 16 get one dose, in-person work will be allowed in all business sectors. Two weeks after 60% of Michiganders get at least one dose, indoor capacity at sports stadiums, conference centers, banquet halls and funeral homes will increase to 25%; gym capacity will increase to 50%; and bars and restaurants will no longer be required to close early.

Two weeks after 65% of Michiganders get at least one dose, all indoor capacity limits will be lifted, but social distancing between parties will be maintained. Limits on residential social gatherings will also be relaxed. Two weeks after 70% get at least one dose, the gatherings and face mask order will be lifted.

Currently, just under 36% of Michiganders are fully vaccinated and just under 49% have received one dose.

outlines-plan-to-lift-covid-19-restrictions-in-michigan/"> Governor Gretchen Whitmer's plan to roll back COVID-19 restrictions by linking them to vaccination rates in the state.

Cambensy spoke about the plan and voiced some of her thoughts about it with Mark and Walt in the Morning today.

The Marquette Democrat says the plan, which was announced yesterday morning by the Governor, came as somewhat of a surprise to her and other lawmakers, but she sees its value.

Cambensy says she does have some issues, though, with parts of the plan, including tying the loosening of restrictions to the vaccination rates by region around the state.

She added that she believes local health departments and other local medical experts should have a larger role in determining the rollback of restrictions within communities because they have a better sense of the virus in their areas.

The 8th Day: Christopher Kelly - America Invaded A State By State Guide To Fighting On American Soil

Coverage:

Christopher Kelly - America Invaded A State By State Guide To Fighting On American Soil Invasions have occurred in all fifty u.s. states countless times over the course of history. Have you ever wondered why some towns in Texas have French names? Or why there's a statue of a Shawnee chief at the U.S. Naval Academy? Or what coastal wildlife refuges have to do with American fears of invasion? And what the Olive Oil Riot in Montana was really all about? American Invaded: A State by State Guide to Fighting on American Soil by Christopher Kelly and Stuart Laycock (History Invasions Press, August 2017) has the answers to these intriguing questions, and many more. All are rooted in one often-overlooked fact: The United States of America, which throughout history has invaded dozens upon dozens of other countries from Normandy in 1944 to Iraq in 2003, has itself also been invaded on countless occasions. Americans are often resistant to this notion. Yet, ever ever since humans first set foot on the North American continent, they have explored, discovered, established boundaries and subsequently invaded all across the territory we now call the United States. In America Invaded, Kelly and Laycock provide a snapshot of the waves of invasion qualified as episodes of fighting on U.S. soil that have touched all fifty American states and Washington D.C. Drawing on years of meticulous research including a drive through 36 states, they chronicle some of the many explorations and invasions that founded or destroyed towns, that set and reset state lines, and that shaped the peoples and culture of this nation. Readers will learn how: Czarist Russia invaded California Confederates invaded Vermont from Canada during the Civil War Also during the Civil War, Union troops clashed with Copperheads (Democrats who opposed the war) in Charleston, Illinois Japan invaded the Aleutian Islands, shelled the California coast, and bombed the forests of Oregon in World War II Japanese balloon bombs rained down on at least 15 western states during World War II, including Colorado, Washington, California, Texas, Wyoming, Nebraska and Iowa Six Americans and more than one hundred and twenty Mexicans were killed in a border skirmish known as the Battle of Ambos Nogales in Arizona in 1918 And much more Prof. Andrew Roberts, author of Napoleon; A Life , says Christopher Kelly and Stuart Laycock have once again pulled off a remarkable feat of fascinating scholarship. What an inspired idea to look at how warfare has touched each state of the Union individually, reminding us simultaneously of the proud American warrior tradition and of the sometimes brutal and bloody birth pangs of the USA. Readers of America Invaded will be reminded of the fluidity of political boundaries of the states. New Hampshire, Maine, and Vermont were eventually detached from Massachusetts. West Virginia was carved out of Virginia during the Civil War. The book also includes essential tourist information about sites connected to American military history in all fifty states and Washington D.C., also listed on its website: www.americainvaded.com.

The 8th Day: Kath Usitalo - Book 100 Things To Do In The Upper Peninsula Before You Die

Coverage:

Michigan's Upper Peninsula is known for its stunning beauty and natural wonders, four seasons (one of which brings tons of snow), and quirky personality traits that come with living in a vast, sparsely populated land surrounded on three sides by the Great Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior. Kath Usitalo's book 100 Things to Do in the Upper Peninsula Before You Die is both an introduction to the

UP and a handy resource for veteran visitors and Yoopers (resident UP-ers) who find plenty to discover and share with family and friends. Kath carefully curated a winter itinerary, which can be found in the back of the book. Some activities to consider can be found below: The Northern Lights are spectacular in the cold, clear dark skies of the UP, especially along hundreds of miles of Lake Superior shoreline. Although unpredictable, the best opportunity for aurora viewing is from fall through spring. Skiers, snowmobilers, snowshoers and winter warriors from ice climbers and fat tire bikers to dog sledders and surfers (yes, surfing Lake Superior in winter is a thing) head to the UP for dependable lake effect snow, wide open spaces and terrain to suit varying levels of expertise. With the snow come events like dog sled and snowmobile races and celebrations of winter that include a wife-carrying contest and an outhouse race on skis. After (or instead of) a long day of braving the elements, warm up in a hot sauna, relax by a roaring fire, and get cozy in a toasty cabin or one-of-a-kind Band

The 8th Day: Governor Whitmer Announces Mask Mandates Will Be Lifted June 1st

Coverage:

Today Governor Whitmer and Lieutenant Governor Garlin Gilchrist spoke to share changes made to the Back to Normal project and stated that all mask mandates will be lifted on Tuesday, July 1st. Good afternoon. Today, I am going to provide an update on masks and then we will walk through some of the changes to the Back To Normal plan about building back our economy. Gov. Gretchen Whitmer: To date, Michigan has administered almost 7.9 million doses of the safe, effective COVID-19 vaccines to more than 4.6 million Michiganders ages 16 and up, with 57% of our eligible population receiving at least one dose. Cases and test positivity have declined for five straight weeks, hospitalizations have declined for three weeks in a row, and our COVID metrics are trending downward in Michigan and, of course, across the country. This is great news. Over 60% of American adults have gotten their first shots and almost half are fully vaccinated nationwide, so life is getting back to normal. Last Thursday, the CDC released new guidance on masks based on the strength of vaccines and preventing infection and spread among vaccinated people. Now, the guidance stated that vaccinated people no longer need to wear masks or socially distance outdoors or indoors other than in certain medical spaces. We have adjusted our mask policy to match the CDC recommendation, so now in Michigan, fully-vaccinated people no longer need to wear a mask outdoors or indoors unless required by their work or business. Our recovery continues to pick up steam. Michigan's unemployment rate is now 4.9%. That's over a full point below the national average. In the past year, unemployment in Michigan has fallen by nearly 80% and we have added 968,000 jobs over the last year. But we still have work to do. We are still short of where we were before the pandemic and our economic recovery is going well, but we need to do and continue to do a lot more to invest in our families, small businesses and communities to help them succeed. As with every decision that we've made throughout the pandemic, we are leading with science and data to keep you and your family safe. But the way to put this pandemic behind us is for everyone to get their shot. The vaccine is the best way to keep you and your family and the most vulnerable among us safe from COVID-19. Recently, the Pfizer vaccine, manufactured right here in Michigan, was authorized for children ages 12 to 16. Tens of thousands of kids have already gotten their shot to protect themselves from COVID and its variants, and I encourage all parents with kids in that age range to speak to your doctors about this vaccine. While millions of Michiganders have already gotten vaccinated, I know that many people still have questions, or some just want to wait it out. I want to speak to those people and answer some of their questions. First, these vaccines are safe. Over 160 million Americans have taken it. It's been rigorously tested and is trusted by doctors. Like other vaccines before it for polio and smallpox, the vaccine represents hope and healing. And even if you've had COVID, you should still get vaccinated to protect yourself from variants and repeat infection. If you received a monoclonal-antibody treatment, you should still get your shot, but you need to wait 90 days after the treatment. If you want to know more, I encourage you to speak with your family doctor and learn how vaccines can save your life and the lives of the people you love. Now, let's talk about some changes to the Back To Normal plan. As you can probably imagine, when the CDC came out last week with new mask guidance, we had to go back to the drawing board. Come on, that's kind of funny. You're not paying attention. All right. We went back to the drawing board. Originally our plan had four steps, each of which was tied to a percentage of Michiganders receiving their first shot plus two weeks. The first step started at 55%, and we hit that number pretty quickly. That means that we take the step on next Monday of getting people back in workplaces. The following steps would have happened every 5% as our vaccinations grew. On May 10th, when we [inaudible 00:11:51] at 55%, we now will see MIOSHA take action to allow offices across Michigan to allow in-person work at workplaces. Next Monday, we'll have a lot more detail to share on the MIOSHA rules for COVID-19 workplace safety. Now, based on the new mask guidance, we have two steps to get back to normal. On June 1st, all right, June 1st, all outdoor capacity limits will be lifted including here at the Dow Diamond. You can come and cheer on the Loons. We will maintain €! All right. The Dow Diamond folks are really excited, and I am too. We will maintain our mask rule as already announced, but otherwise lift all mitigation measures on outdoor gatherings and only retain a 50% capacity limit on indoor establishments. That means that an indoor social gathering like a wedding or a funeral or a conference or a graduation party will be allowed to resume at 50% capacity through the month of June. In June, people who are not yet fully vaccinated are-In June, people who are not yet fully vaccinated are required to continue to mask up when they are indoors. MDHHS will officially release the updated order on Monday, so you can check it out that. On July 1, that is when we will take our final step. We will lift the broad mask and gatherings order, and we'll no longer impose broad mitigation measures during the pandemic. Unless of course, unanticipated circumstances arise. We do not expect that to happen. We look at this as the last moment of these types of orders. We will be able to sing at church, dance at weddings, cheer at games, hug each other, and laugh together. I know that that is welcome news to so many. We may have one or more targeted orders in place to protect vulnerable populations, but for the most part, life will be back to normal and we can have the kind of Independence Day we're all looking forward to. After a year of living with COVID and with masks and distancing and hand-washing, I know how jarring any change to our daily lives feel. In this time of transition, I'm asking that people extend one another a little bit of grace. As we return to normal, we should remember that tough times don't last but tough people do. We've gotten through this pandemic because of each other, because of our fellow Michiganders. As daily routines start to look more normal, we should recognize that everyone processes change at different speeds and in different ways. And so for the next few weeks and possibly months, some Michiganders will feel safer with a mask, even if they've been vaccinated, and that's okay. Other Michiganders who may have been vaccinated are ready to go mask free, and that's okay too. Either way, there should be no shaming or guilt tripping. Instead, I encourage people to have a conversation with their family doctor about the safe, effective vaccines, ask your questions, and learn more about how incredible they are and how they can help us get back to normal. So personally, since I am two weeks past my second dose, I'm going mask free because I know it's safe for my family, for me, and those around me. We should trust one another to make choices that are best for us. On July 1st, the broad mask rule will be lifted, but I want to be clear about the fact that businesses and workplaces are well within their rights to require masks as patrons go in. So, let's give them our support as they navigate what's best for them and their workforce and their patrons. There will ultimately come a day when masks will be distant memories, maybe in boxes in our basements, but until then, we've got to transition back to normalcy together and give each other some grace. Now, as our economic recovery continues, our task is clear, build back better. Right now we have an opportunity to make transformative investments in Michigan's fundamentals, in our schools, in our small businesses, in our communities. We have over a billion dollars in federal COVID relief funds sent to us by the Trump administration. You heard that right. Last year, they sent it to us and they're still awaiting action in the legislature. I want to thank Midland's Senator, Senator Stamas, and our Appropes chair, for helping get dollars out the door for Michiganders. And I look forward to continuing our partnership to do just that. We also have billions headed our way under President Biden's American Rescue Plan, which includes $5.7 billion to the State of Michigan, $4.4 billion to local governments, and $3.9 billion to Michigan schools. We need to think big right now, think outside the box. If we use these resources effectively, we can create thousands of good paying jobs for Michiganders and put us on a path to prosperity that far outlast our recovery from COVID. In addition to these federal funds, we also have the state budget, and I laid out my budget priorities back in February. My budget proposal focuses on people, projects, and potential. Largest investment in K-12 education in our history, without raising taxes, invest $370 million to lower childcare costs, in some cases, down to zero for 150,000 Michigan families, beefs up the Michigan Reconnect and Futures for Frontliners, puts $300 million toward fixing bridges, $290 million in the MI Clean Water Plan to build up water infrastructure and create thousands of good paying jobs. So to meet this moment, we have to work together in a civil bipartisan way. We got to get these billions and aid out the door for Michiganders now.

Gov. Gretchen Whitmer: Our jobs numbers are headed in the right direction, and we still have work to do to get back to our pre-pandemic levels of employment and beyond. I look forward to getting these budgets done and spending these federal dollars in the smartest way to benefit all Michiganders. In the weeks and months ahead, as we emerge from this pandemic, my administration will double down on the kitchen table issues that have guided our agenda from day one, a great education for every Michigan child, better paying jobs and path to education and skills, clean air and water, reliable roads and bridges, and much more. I am excited about the opportunity in front of us, and I'll continue to work to make sure we realize our potential. So with that, thank you. I'm going to hand it over to the lieutenant governor, and then we'll go from there. Thanks.

Lieutenant Governor Garlin Gilchrist: Thank you, Governor, and good afternoon, everyone. I also want to acknowledge and thank Governor Whitmer for her leadership. I also want to acknowledge Jim Fitterling, Dow, the mayor, others who have joined us here today for this important announcement about how we're going to move forward together, the pathway to the back end of this pandemic. I'm really thrilled to be here in Midland, here at the Dow Diamond. When we marked the one year anniversary, excuse me, of our first COVID cases, we stood in stadiums like this that were empty, addressing the hardships that we have been through as a state. But all of us, even at that moment when we were low, we had hope, hope that we'd be able to fill stadiums like this one, stadiums like the Breslin Center, stadiums like The Big House, to enjoy a musical or a play at the thousands of theater venues across the State of Michigan, or like the Fox Theatre in my hometown of Detroit, and of course enjoy the sports that we love and that connect us across any device. With every passing day, we move closer to reaching and reclaiming that sense of normalcy that we have all been craving. We must continue to encourage every person in Michigan who's eligible to make the choice to get vaccinated. This is the safest, this is the pathway for us to make sure that we can protect one another in addition to protecting ourselves, and that we can enable the opportunity that we know lies before us. In this particular area, I know that we're no stranger to coming together, because we faced unimaginable circumstances here in Mid Michigan. Shortly after the flooding that happened in this area, I was able to come out and personally tour where the dams fell. I was inspired to see how quickly the people of Midland and Sanford came together to support one another. I was actually equally inspired by the way that people from every corner of the State of Michigan really stepped up to stand tall for their Michigan neighbors, and friends, and family, and yet strangers, because they knew that that helping hand was necessary. I've also visited Sanford Park for cleanup project and toward the M30 bridge that was rebuilt in partnership with community and with the Michigan Department of Transportation. I'm thankful for those employees and team members who worked tirelessly to repair that bridge and do so, so quickly, recognizing how critical that infrastructure is to this community. So many people have opened their doors to friends and family in need of shelter, in need of support. It's like everyone coming together after this historic flooding event to start the next chapter, and the people of Mid Michigan have stepped up and begun writing. And that's why one year later, Governor Whitmer and I are here to show, not only that we continue to maintain support, but that support is not going anywhere. Now, since the start of the pandemic, the governor had been focused on trying to do the right things, on acting quickly, on following the science, on listening to experts. And because of not only governor's leadership but because people across the state, elected appointed leaders, community leaders, individuals have stepped up, Michigan is on our way to getting back to normal and rebuilding and re-imagining our economy. We have so many resources that the state has contributed and committed to supporting not only the survival, but supporting those who are going to be coming out bigger and better after this pandemic is over, whether it's programs like our Small Business Restart Grants, programs to support restaurant owners and workers, programs to support the first responders and the people who've been working all weird during this pandemic to make sure that we could continue life and sustain it. We are looking forward to continuing those investments and leveraging every resource so that we can emerge from this pandemic stronger and better connected than ever. We'll leverage all of the resources of state government to rebuild this economy back better, harnessing every economic tool at our disposal, and working with leaders in government, leaders in the private sector and beyond to create an environment where entrepreneurs, where people with ideas no matter where they live in Michigan, can bring those ideas forward into reality, to create good paying jobs and opportunities for all Michiganders. Just yesterday, we saw how Michigan's economy is moving forward. As our unemployment rate is lower than national average, we've added jobs for three consecutive months. 968,000 jobs have been added over the past year. That is real progress, progress toward getting Michiganders and our economy back to normal. The governor will remain focused on economic recovery resilience, and most of all opportunity for all, but one of the most important steps, whi

h we cannot reiterate enough is making the choice to get vaccinated. Since I last spoke with the press corps, I've had a chance to receive my second dose in Flint, Michigan. I'm proud now to be counted amongst the people who have gotten both shots. This is our best shot to be free from this pandemic and the quickest way to getting our country and our communities back to where we want them to be, where we can hug one another, we can get back to work, we can go to restaurant, we can send our kids to school to play sports without the thought and the fears that we've all had to live with. But even now, there's still conversations to be had with people who have questions. Those questions are okay, and those questions have answers. It's important to recognize that we all have the power to encourage someone to make that choice, and that every person in Michigan who has not yet chosen to get vaccinated is just one conversation away. That's why we formed the Protect Michigan Commission to connect people with the information and resources from credible sources that they could trust, from community resources that people have relationships with and have had self-regenerations, to use that credibility, to demonstrate the credibility of the vaccine. And this effort has required the biggest, broadest coalition of leaders for anything we faced in Michigan-Broadest coalition of leaders for anything we faced in Michigan. It's the largest and most diverse commission that we've appointed and it's working, as people choosing to get vaccinated every single day. So I want to challenge Michiganders, especially those who have already gotten at least one vaccine dose, to talk about your experience. To let people know whether you had questions, whether it took a little convincing to get you to that decision point. The vaccine sites that I've toured, speaking with nurses who come out of retirement to help this effort they talk about calming and comforting people. As they sit down to get their vaccine dose. Those nurses are public servants. They are heroes and miracle workers because they are helping people get back to normal. So I want you to make sure that you're using every resource you have, that you send a text message to someone today. That you sent a Facebook message to someone today. That you have a conversation on the phone or in person with someone today. Because we all know people who may not have yet made that choice. But if we make every effort we can get to and beyond having 70% of people in Michigan vaccinated, we can see the finish line coming into focus and now we got to give it everything we have. This is essential and it's the most important choice that people in Michigan can make right now. Along with our partners in the federal government, Governor Whitmer and I have committed to making sure that we can grow our economy back stronger and better. We're going to use everything at our disposal to make that happen. This has shown us in this pandemic that Michiganders really can do anything. We are capable of any and everything when we come together and work together to do extraordinary things. We've seen that spirit here in Midland, in a matter of hours this community came together to start recovering from a once in 500 year flood to mobilize and evacuate to safety, tens of thousands of people with not a single casualty. That is the embodiment of hope, determination, and grit. That is in the DNA of every person who calls Michigan home. So I hope that every person who's watching from around the state can channel that energy that is so present and is represented by these people and these leaders in this part of our state today. Lieutenant Governor Garlin Gilchrist: So thank you all for having me today. Thank you all for really, truly standing tall for one another and standing tall for the state of Michigan. And let's remember to reach out to one another, to take care of one another, to be there for one another. Let's make sure every Michigander knows that every other Michigander has their back. And now it's my honor to turn the podium here over the mayor of this great city.

The Sunny Morning Show: Wausau Homes' Chris Pesola Discusses Building Custom Homes During The Pandemic

Coverage:

Home building and residential construction have faced some unique challenges over the last 15 months during the coronavirus pandemic.

Wausau Homes Custom Home Builder Chris Pesola spoke about current trends in the industry recently with Mark and Walt in the Morning.

Pesola said the pandemic has created a current environment of higher material costs and shipping delays, but he is finding clients that are still intent on moving ahead with projects.

He added that the current boom in the existing home market has resulted in prices for those homes that makes building a new home to custom specifications a realistic possibility for many families.

Pesola said while prices for materials are beginning to trend downward, anyone thinking of a new home build or a residential renovation should still budget for higher costs than expected and be patient as the supply chain is just beginning to recover from the pandemic.

Find out more about options for custom new home building projects at the Wausau Homes website.

The 8th Day: Vice President Harris Makes History At Naval Academy Commencement

Coverage:

The 8th Day with Todd Pazz played the Naval Academy's graduation commencement speech. It was historical as the guest was the first woman to ever give the speech. Who was the woman? Vice President Kamala Harris. The full transcript of the speech is below. THE VICE PRESIDENT: Good morning. (Applause.) Acting Secretary Thomas Harker, General David Berger, Admiral Mike Gilday: Looking out at these midshipmen, I know we are all filled with pride. Vice Admiral Sean Buck, Captain T.R. Buchanan, faculty and staff: Thank you for educating such a fine crew. Alumni, thank you for the support you have shown over these years to this great institution. And to my Military Aide, Lieutenant Colonel Frank Machniak, who graduated in 2004, I am very proud to have you with me here today. Family and friends of these graduates, thank you for the sacrifices you have already made and will make. And I also want to acknowledge Kim and John Johnson. Your son was taken far too soon. And I promise you that he will not be forgotten. And finally, to the Class of 2021, congratulations. Congratulations. (Applause.) And look how far you've come. So, you endured 0530 PT and pro-no exams. You excelled on athletic fields and in academic exercises. You enjoyed the fare at Dillo's (laughter) I know karaoke at Harvest. (Applause.) You guys rolled up your sleeves and you got vaccinated. And you made it to this day. You made it to this day. (Applause.) And this day this day that is not only a commencement, this day that is a commissioning. And in a few minutes, you will take an oath. And it's actually the same oath I took as Vice President. An oath to support our Constitution and defend it against all enemies. An oath that has its roots in the founding of our nation. And no matter what changes in our world, the charge in this oath is constant. Remember that as you walk out into the world, because the world you all are walking into is rapidly changing. In fact, we are at a significant turning point. Just look at the last several months, and you know what I'm talking about. And look at several moments in our nation's history for perspective. Think about it: There was the world before the stock market crashed in 1929 and the world after. The world before the attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941 and the world after. The world before the Civil Rights Act in 1964 and the world after. The world before the Berlin Wall fell in 1989 and the world after. At some of these critical moments, our nation was compelled to take a hard look at both our priorities and our preparedness. And another turning point was September 11th 20 years ago, this year when airplanes hit the Twin Towers and our Pentagon, when Flight 93 crashed in Pennsylvania. That day shaped your entire life, and it shaped our entire nation. It tested our systems, our structures, our very standing in the world. Well, Midshipmen, we are now entering the next era. A new age, a new epoch, with its own tests, with its own challenges, and with its own opportunities. The global pandemic you see, of course has accelerated what was happening before, and it has accelerated our world into a new era. It has forever influenced our perspective. And if we weren't clear before, we know now our world is interconnected, our world is interdependent, and our world is fragile. Just think, a deadly pandemic can spread throughout the globe in just a matter of months. A gang of hackers can disrupt the fuel supply of a whole seaboard. One country's carbon emissions can threaten the sustainability of the whole Earth. This, Midshipmen, is the era we are in, and it is unlike any era that came before. So the challenge now the challenge before us now is how to mount a modern defense to these modern threats. So, let me share with you, for example, a personal experience. A few years ago, when I was in the United States Senate, I visited the USS Scranton. It was outside of San Diego, California. And at the time, I was also a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee. So, when I was aboard the vessel, I asked the officers I said, Hey, tell me, what does it take to protect such a valuable asset against cyberattacks? And they told me, You know, it's pretty simple: equipment and experts. Well, the way I see it, Midshipmen, you you you are those experts. On the issue of cybersecurity: Foreign advisor- adversaries have their sights set on our military technology, our intellectual property, our elections, our critical infrastructure. The ransomware attack by criminal hackers earlier this month well, that was a warning shot. In fact, there have been many warning shots. So, we must defend our nation against these threats and, at the same time, we must make advances in things that you've been learning things like quantum computing and artificial intelligence and robotics and things that will put our nation at a strategic advantage. And you will be the ones to do it. You will be the ones to do it because the United States military is the best, the bravest, and the most brilliant. (Applause.) And just think, from walkie-talkies, to the Internet, to satellite navigation, the United States military has been on the forefront of research, development, and technological advancement. That is a point of American pride. And as I look out at all of you, I know you will build on that leadership. And then, of course, there is climate change, which is a very real threat to our national security. And I look at you and I know you are among the experts who will navigate and mitigate this threat. You are ocean engineers who will help navigate ships through thinning ice. You are mechanical engineers who will help reinforce sinking bases. You are electrical engineers who will soon help convert solar and wind energy into power, convert solar and wind energy into combat power. And just ask any Marine today, would she rather carry 20 pounds of batteries or a rolled-up solar panel? And I am positive she will tell you a solar panel, and so would he. (Laughter and applause.) The American people are depending on you: the best, the bravest, the most brilliant. We saw this during COVID-19, when Americans watched how members of our military helped vaccinate our nation. Because you know biological threats like pandemics and infectious diseases are yet another threat in this era, and you are confronting this threat. Our military helped develop the technology that made the vaccine possible. Naval researchers also figured out how to use 3D knitting machines to make masks. Naval labs monitored the spread of the disease. And the Marine Corps and the Navy are leading on making the connection between the pandemic and medical readiness of our fighting forces for the future. Class of 2021, you are prepared for all of this. You are prepared for any threat. And you are prepared for this new era. And it is not only because of the knowledge and the skills you gained here or those you will continue to learn, but it's because of something more. It's because of who each of you is. It is because of who, collectively, you are. So, as I conclude today, that's what I want to talk about. I want to talk about you. As Vice President, I've come to know the United States Navy quite well. Every day, in fact, I'm surrounded by sailors and Marines and your tradition and your history. And I mean that literally. So, I often travel on Marine Two. In fact, that's how I arrived today. My residence is on the grounds of the United States Naval Observatory. My West Wing office features a desk built by Seabees from timbers of the USS Constitution. My ceremonial office my ceremonial office was once occupied by the Secretary of the Navy. And displayed there, I have placed the shoulder boards of your brigade commander, Midshipman Sydney Barber. And so here's what I know. Midshipmen, you are tireless. You are ambitious. You are a fierce fighting force. You are idealists in the truest sense. You are the embodiment of American aspiration. So hold on to that. Because in your career, you may witness some of the worst of humanity. But promise that you will never forget the best of who we are, that you will never forget the ideals you stand for: duty, honor, loyalty. Fight for those ideals, and fight for our democracy. And remember, our Constitution is not only something to defend; it is a guide. It is a guide for your service. It begins with three simple words: We, the people. Not I. We. Our nation was designed to be a team sport. And we are in this together. So, you know, finally, I'll just share with you: On my way to the stadium this morning, I stopped by the cemetery to pay my respects to my dear former colleague, a great and courageous American: Senator John McCain. And, yes. (Applause.) So, most people don't know, he wanted to be buried next to his best friend who he met on the Yard: Admiral Chuck Larson. That is the ultimate example of what I mean in it together. So, Midshipmen, throughout our history, officers in the United States Navy, officers in the United States Marine have risked everything to defend our freedoms. Today, you will swear to do the same. You are the next links in the chain. And so, Midshipmen, when you stand to take the oath, I want you to know that, as we embark on this new era, President Joe Biden and I, our entire nation have great faith in you. And we are proud of you so very, very proud. Congratulations again. May God bless you. And may God bless the United States of America. Thank you. (Applause.)

The 8th Day: The 8th Day Talks With Samantha Ashby From Peter White Public Library

Coverage:

Todd Pazz of The 8th Day sat with Samantha Ashby to talk about the Peter White Public Library staying open during the pandemic and afterwards.

Samantha Ashby is the Head of Adult Services at PWPL. She's the one who gets to purchase all of the library's contents: books, magazines, and other media. Samantha mentions that although the library shut down for a short period of time. The PWPL opened for computer appointments in July 2020 paired with curbside services. They opened fully on January 25th, 2021 for the public.

<h2>Library Services</h2>

The PWPL has many services that the public was once able to take full part in before the pandemic. Now that we're entering a life post-COVID some of the restrictions are being lifted.

Samantha brought up the private study rooms that library card holders can take advantage of to use for practicing presentations and zoom meetings. She also was unsure, but confident, that the community room can be rented out. However, capacity limits may be applied to ensure public health and safety. They're working on getting the Shiras Room open for public use and are very close to completing it. Samantha also mentioned they are going to be hosting various events, but are planning to have them outside as long as the weather permits it.

In terms of reference material, Todd brought up the use of genealogy references at the library.

Samantha mentions that they've been doing genealogy help via Zoom for the last year. They're hoping to bring back in-person help in the fall.

<h2>Coronavirus</h2>

Samantha told The 8th Day that she was positive for COVID-19 earlier in the year. After having the virus, she wrote about her experience and submitted it to the Marquette County Stories of the Pandemic. It's the PWPL's project with the Marquette Regional History Center where they're trying to collect people's personal stories and experiences during the pandemic.

Todd Pazz brought up the importance of the Stories of the Pandemic from a historical stand-point. The project really sheds light on the severity and realness of the pandemic, and how close to home it really hit some people. Its also important to archive these experiences to give the public a reference point if something as severe as the coronavirus, polio, or the Spanish flu were to happen again.

The Peter White Public Library does keep a "covid file" for the public to look to for recent news regarding the virus, and to look at the virus from the beginning.

The 8th Day: The 8th Day Welcomes New Web Department Member Knute Olson

Coverage:

Todd Pazz of the 8th Day sat down to welcome new mediaBrew! employee, Knute Olson.

Knute is very excited about the new job opportunity. He got into graphic design to make things and help people, and now that he's able to apply what he loves to do in a professional setting is satisfying.

He enjoys the ability to make a personal connection with the local clients. He'll be designing everything from websites to letterheads for the local businesses.

Knute was working a lot of "one-and-done" projects before coming to mediaBrew, but prefers the steady workflow of the office. The ability to create many different things for different people was a very attractive part of the job for Knute. He brought up that no matter how much "raw" knowledge he has. That there's always something new to learn, and how to do it.

He also talked about a series of summer time events planned in Western Marquette County and how there is a need for volunteers, adding that the GINCC office can direct those interested in getting involved to the groups who need some help.

On June 20, the pair is back outside to install the second array, with the other four being installed at a later date. NASA, SpaceX Update Crew Launch and Return Dates NASA and SpaceX have adjusted target launch and return dates for upcoming Commercial Crew missions to and from the International Space Station. Our SpaceX Crew-3 mission is now targeted for launch no earlier than Oct. 31, while the Crew-2 astronauts currently onboard the station are looking at a return to Earth in early-to-mid November. The next crew rotation mission beyond that is targeted for no earlier than mid-April 2022. Melroy Confirmed as Deputy Administrator The U.S. Senate confirmed former NASA astronaut Pam Melroy to be NASA's next deputy administrator. President Biden nominated Melroy for the position in April. She is a veteran of three spaceflights, has more than 38 days in space, and is one of only two women to command a space shuttle. Administrator Nelson Testifies at Budget Hearing During a June 15 Senate hearing on the President's budget request for NASA, our Administrator Bill Nelson discussed how the budget will help America maintain its leadership role in space exploration. He also talked about the importance of the funding to STEM education initiatives through which NASA can continue to recruit and maintain a diverse workforce, which has been key to the agency's success. We are being very mindful to diversify. This, I believe is directed for the entire Executive Branch of government. But I take it very, very seriously. Bill Nelson, NASA Administrator NASA Launches Mission Equity On June 15, NASA launched Mission Equity, a comprehensive effort to review NASA programs, procurements, grants, practices, and policies, and assess potential barriers and challenges that may exist for historically underrepresented and underserved communities seeking access to them. The effort includes an agency request for public feedback. The Power of Active Allyship @ NASA An agency LGBTQ+ Pride Month event on June 17 focused on the power of active allyship. It featured a panel discussion about what it means to be an ally, some of the barriers faced by the LGBTQ+ community, and what you €€ as an active ally €€ can do to help break down those barriers. New Postal Stamps of SDO Views of Sun To kick off the start of summer, the U.S. Postal Service issued a set of stamps highlighting NASA's Solar Dynamics Observatory, or SDO. The Sun Science stamps celebrate over a decade of Sun-watching for SDO. The mission helps researchers study and track regular solar activity, like solar flares and coronal mass ejections €€ which can impact technology and life on and near Earth. That's what's up this week @NASA €€ For more on these and other stories, follow us on the web at nasa.gov/twan.

The 8th Day: President Joe Biden on the Bipartisan Infrastructure Framework

Coverage:

Remarks by President Biden on the Bipartisan Infrastructure Deal
THE PRESIDENT: Please, please be seated. I got my notes here. Well, good afternoon. If you hear a little noise in the background, it's because I'm supposed to be getting on a helicopter to head to North Carolina, which I'm going to be doing short- right after this. And the Vice President and I, though, want to lay out what we've just settled, at least for the moment, with our friends the bipartisan group of senators. I said many times before: There's nothing our nation can't do when we decide to do it together, do it as one nation. Today is the latest example of that truth, in my view. I'm pleased to report that a bipartisan group of senators five Democrats, five Republicans part of a larger group have come together and forged an agreement that will create millions of American jobs and modernize our American infrastructure to compete with the rest of the world and own the 21st century. I want to thank them for working together and for raising their ideas and concerns with me and with the Vice President, as well as with our Jobs Cabinet: Secretaries Buttigieg is here good to see you, Mr. Secretary. Secretary Fudge. Secretary Granholm. Secretary there you are okay, you guys to make sure I I I thought everybody was on this side. I was €“(laughs). Secretary Raimondo and Secretary Walsh. I also want to thank Senator Shelley Capito for her earlier work on an infrastructure agreement. We didn't reach an agreement, but she tried her best to get something done. I'm sure it helped produce the final agreement we have. The fact is, investment in jobs and infrastructure have often had bipartisan support in the past. Matter of fact, when I first got to the United States Senate, it was probably the least difficult thing to do is pass infrastructure plans. But even so, it's been a very long time since the last time our country was able to strike a major bipartisan deal on American infrastructure which is so badly needed, I might add. We devoted far too much energy to competing with one another and not nearly enough energy competing with the rest of the world to win the 21st century. The investments we'll be making as a result of this deal are long overdue. They'll put Americans to work in good-paying jobs repairing our roads and our bridges. They'll deliver high-speed Internet to every American home, bringing down the price that people pay now for Internet service. And they'll close the American digital divide as been driven home by every mother and father with a child at home during the COVID crisis, that is, thank God, abating. And kids not being able to be in school. This is going to put plumbers and pipefitters to work. It's going to replace 100 percent of the nation's lead water pipes so that every child and every American could turn on the faucet at home or at school and drink clean water, including in low-income communities and communities of color that have been disproportionately affected by lead pipes and the consequences of that. This still makes key investments to put people to work all across the country building transmission lines, upgrading the power grid to be more ener- more energy efficient and resilient in extreme weather to be able to sustain extreme weather and the and the climate crisis. It also builds our natural infrastructure our coastlines and our and our levees to be more resilient as well. American workers will be installing electric vehicle charging stations and undertaking critical environmental cleanups. This bipartisan agreement represents the largest investment in public transit in American history. And I might add that the largest investment in rail, since the creation of Amtrak. You all know I have nothing but affection for Amtrak, having traveled over a million miles on it, commuting every day. But it's a big deal. This agreement is going to create a new financing authority that's going to leverage private capital and infrastructure and clean energy projects that will provide folks with good-paying jobs that can't be outsourced the kinds of jobs that provide middle-class a middle-class life with a little bit of breathing room a little bit of breathing room for American families. My dad used to say, Being in the middle class is just being able to take that extra breath. I mean it sincerely. Think about it. Think about all the people who can't take that breath because they don't they have no margin for error. We're and we're and we're going to do it all without raising a cent from earners below $400,000. There's no gas tax increase, no fee on electric vehicles. And the fact is, we're going to help ensure that we're going to make sure that everybody in America is in a position to be able to do what need be done. And so what I've because and let me be clear: We're in a race with China and the rest of the world for the 21st century. They're not waiting. They're investing tens of billions of dollars across the board. Tens of billions. I just came back from Europe with meeting with the G7, as well as with NATO, as well as the EU, and as well as with Mr. Putin all separately. There's massive investment going on in the among the autocrats. One of the underlying questions is: Can democracies compete with autocratic enterprises in the 21st century? And this is a big move toward that, being able to compete. We have to move, and we have to move fast. And this agreement singles signals to the world that we can function, deliver, and do significant things. These investment rep- these investments represent the kind of national effort that, throughout our history, has literally not figuratively literally transformed America and propelled us into the future. The transcontinental railroad, the Interstate Highway System investments that we made together that only our government was in a position to make. Now we're poised to add a new chapter in that American tradition. Let me be clear: Neither side got everything they wanted in this deal, and that's what it means to compromise. And it reflects something important: It reflects consensus. The heart of democracy requires consensus. And it's time a true this time a true bipartisan effort, breaking the ice that too often has kept us frozen in place and prevented us from solving the real problems facing the American people. This deal this deal means millions of good-paying jobs, and fewer burdens felt at the kitchen table and across the country, and safer and healthier communities. But it also signals to ourselves and to the world that American democracy can deliver. And because of that, it represents an important step forward for our country. I want to be clear about something else: Today is a huge day for one half of my economic agenda, the American Jobs Plan. It delivers on clean transportation, clean water and clean water, universal broadband, clean power infrastructure, and environmental resilience. In these areas, it invests two thirds of the resources that I proposed in my American Jobs Plan. Two thirds of what I called for in those areas. But I'm getting to work with Congress right right away on the other half of my economic agenda as well the American Family Plan to finish the job on childcare, education, the caring economy, clean energy tax cuts clean energy, and tax cuts for American families, and much more. For me, investment in our physical and human infrastructure are inextricably intertwined. Both make us better off and stronger. The case for these investments is clear. Economists left, right, and center independent Wall Street forecasters, they all say that these kinds of public investments mean more jobs, more workers participating in the labor force, higher productivity, and higher growth for our economy over the long run. Both need to get done, and I'm going to work closely with Speaker Pelosi and Leader Schumer to make sure that both move through the legislative process promptly and in tandem. Let me emphasize that: and in tandem. We need physical infrastructure, but we also need the human infrastructure as well. They're a part of my overall plan. What we agreed on today is what we could agree on: the physical infrastructure. There was no agreement on the rest. We're going to have to do that through the budget process. And we need a fairer tax system to pay for it all. I'm not going to rest until it all both get to my desk. And lastly, I know there are some of my party who discouraged me from seeking an agreement with our Republican colleagues, who said that we should, Go bigger and go alone. To them, I say this: I have already shown, in my young presidency, that I am prepared to do whatever needs to get done to move the country forward. That's what I did with the American Rescue

Plan, which was $1.9 trillion. But let me say this: When we can't when we can find common ground, though, working across party lines, that is what I will seek to do. The reason why is because broader support for a proposal has the broader support a proposal has in Congress, the stronger its prospects for passage. Working together when we can allows us to make bipartisan process [progress] whenever possible without foreclosing the right and the necessity of moving forward on a on a major on a majority basis when we are at deep odds with one another. So-called reconciliation progress process. And for the for the deal being announced today, there is plenty of work ahead to bring this home. It's going to require hard work and collaboration. The committee chairs and the ranking members are going to play a major part. There are going to be disagreements to resolve and more compromise to be forged along the way. But this group of senators and all of the American people can be proud today because we have reaffirmed, once again, that we are the United States of America. There's not a single thing beyond our capacity that we aren't able to do when we do it together. I know a lot of you in the press, particularly, doubt that unity is possible, that anything bipartisan is possible. It's hard, but it's necessary. And it can get done. So, I want to thank you all. And God bless you. And now I'll take a few questions, before the helicopter leaves without me, from the press. Q Mr. President, what assurances do you have at this point that you have sufficient Democratic support, both in the Senate and the House, to move both on this bipartisan deal and on the reconciliation package? THE PRESIDENT: You always ask me those things. Nobody knows for certain. It's your job, but you know it's not a reasonable question. And the reason I say that I (inaudible) being critical the idea of my telling you now that I know what every senator how they're going to vote is just not I don't know that. I do know that among the roughly 20 bipartisan groups of senators and congr- senators that I met with only 10 were here today, but that group that we had an agreement. For example, you know and you know, they talk about, Well, why would Biden compromise? Well, when's the last time If you had asked me whether or not I'd be able to get passenger rail service or 66 billion dollars' worth largest investment ever since Amtrak came about. I asked for $90 [billion] and got $66 billion. Talk about public transit: $49 billion $49 billion for public transit. When I raised that before, some of you looked at me like, Where have you been, Biden? You've been spending too much in China or something. I hadn't been to China. You know, electric buses $7.5 billion. I asked for $15 [billion]. I couldn't get all of it, but I we compromised. Electric infrastructure that is charging stations along the roads. I got I asked for fifteen; I got seven and a half. These are significant down payments on things that we finally got after negotia- skillful negotiation on the part of my Cabinet and my team, led by Mr. Ricchetti. And so, when you ask me what guarantee do I have that I have all the votes I need: I don't have any guarantee, but what I do have is a pretty good read, over the years, of how the Congress and the Senate works. And the idea that we're not going because someone is not going to be able to get every single thing they want, they're going to vote against some of the things that I just named with nothing in here that's, quote, bad for the environment, bad for the economy, bad for the transportation is unlikely. But I can't guarantee it. You know that. Yes. Q Mr. President, talk a little more about your interactions with Republicans specifically. You said earlier, They've given me their word. Where I come from, that's good enough for me. To skeptics in your own party, what is it about the conversations you've had recently with Republicans that gives you so much hope? And, secondly, you had said earlier you might have more to say about the situation down in South Beach, in Miami. Just curious THE PRESIDENT: I'm going to stick to I will, at the end, answer your South Beach question. But let me so we have some coherence here. Number one, I've worked with a lot of these people who are in the room. I know them. Everybody knows and you guys know: When certain senators tell you something, they mean it. Snd others you take you discount. Where I come from and the in my years in the Senate, the single greatest currency you have is your word keeping your word. Mitt Romney has never broken his word to me. You know, the senator from Alaska and the senator of New Hampshire, they've never broken their wor- I from Maine they've never broken their word. They're friends. And so, the people I was with today are people that I trust. I don't agree with them on a lot of things, but I trust them when they say, This is a deal. We'll stick to the deal. Just like I doubt that you'll find any one of them who say they don't trust me when I said, Okay, this is the deal on these issues, this is a deal we'll stick with. But, for example, there's and I made it clear today there's other things in the environment I want to get done. I think we should have the $300 billion tax credit for dealing with the environment. It (inaudible) giant tax cuts for corporations, but it'll also be a giant move toward weatherizing every building in America and all the things that we need to do. So, there are things and so, when I said, We agree, I'm not going to go back and renegotiate the Amtrak piece, but I am going to fight for trying to get $300 billion more for tax credits for the environment. That's about as best that I can answer the question. Yes, ma'am. Q Mr. President, can you answer a ques- thank you so much. My question is on the timeline. There are families who are looking at the Families Plan and wondering when the help is coming. Can you talk I know you said they're going to be promptly and in tandem, but can you say anything more about that? And what does this signal for future deals? There's still things like voting rights and policing reform that are not able to get bipartisan deals. What does this tell you? What have you learned in talking to Republicans about what would happen in the future? THE PRESIDENT: Let me take you asked three essay questions and legitimate questions, but you asked three of them. The first one related to what, again? Q The first one is on the timeline. When do you think this two-track (inaudible)? THE PRESIDENT: Timeline. And you said, when people are waiting for relief. Q Yes. THE PRESIDENT: I got them Q (Inaudible.) THE PRESIDENT: $1.9 trillion in relief so far. They're going to be getting checks in the mail that are consequential, this week, for childcare. A lot has been happened already. Number one. Number two, I'm going to fight like heck to get them the rest of what I think has to be done. On education, for example, my proposal was, in the Family Plan, early education and free community college. I'm going to fight like the devil to get that done, but it's not going to be with Republican help. I'm going to have to get every Democrat and do it through reconciliation if it gets done. So that's number one. The I think, based on my being out on the street and polling data, I think the people who need the help the most trust me to be fighting to get them the help they need. They know who I am, and they know my record. With regard to the issue of what what about voting rights Q (Inaudible.) THE PRESIDENT: Voting rights is maybe the most consequential thing, I think, with I'm going to be going around the country, spending time making the case to the American people that this just isn't about iden- showing an identification that, This is who I am when I vote. This isn't just about whether or not excuse me you can provide water for someone standing in line while they're waiting to vote. This is about who gets to judge whether your vote counted after it's been cast. Think about it. Up to now, every state and the federal government has assumed that there would be officials who were appointed and/or elected in states where the election commissioners bound by an oath that they would uphold certain requirements to make sure the vote was honest and fair. What these guys are trying to do now, in ro- rough approximation, is say that, If we don't like the vote turned out and we control the state legislature, we're going to say the vote didn't count and we're going to recount. That's never happened before. It's wrong. Who in God's name, as my mother would say, died and left them boss? Your vote has to count when you cast it. There's a lot of ancillary pieces of this legislation that I strongly support. I strongly support the idea that there's no there's no prior if I had my way, there'd be no private contributions to see who gets elected how much money you raise. If I had my way and I think it's really important that every Election Day would be a day off because people can't go to people who work certain shifts can't make it to the election. I would make sure there's automatic registration when you turn 18. That's what I think everybody thinks this fight is about, and it's a worthy fight, but it's much more profound than that. It's about saying that the legislature in Georgia could decide, if it's a Republican legislature, You know, on reflection, we don't think that election was fair. We're going to vote to say it didn't count. It's just simply wrong. It's wrong. And in my view, it borders on being immoral. This is the sacred right to vote. As John Lewis said, It is the the the most important right you have. And so, I'm going to be making the case across the country and, as best I can, to see (inaudible). Q Mr. President? Q Mr. President, do you support critical THE PRESIDENT: Let me go to this side. Q Mr. President, you said you want both of these measures to come to you in tandem. Did you receive any assurances that that would happen? And how do you anticipate what will you do if THE PRESIDENT: I control that.Q they don't get to you in time?THE PRESIDENT: If they don't come, I'm not signing. Real simple.So, but I expect I expect that in the the coming months this summer, before the count the fiscal year is over, that we will have voted on this bill, as well the infrastructure bill as well as voted on the budget record [sic] resolution.And that's when they'll but if only one comes to me, I'm not and if this is the only thing that comes to me, I'm not signing it. It's in tandem.Q Mr. President, do you support, then, Speaker Pelosi's stated plan to hold the bipartisan deal in the House until the Senate also passes reconciliation? Do you support that sequencing on her part?THE PRESIDENT: Yes.Q But, Mr. President, your own party is not on the same page about the reconciliation package. So, by moving forward with this two-track system, are you putting the bipartisan bill in jeopardy?THE PRESIDENT: Sure, the bipartisan bill was look, the bipartisan bill, from the very beginning, was understood there was going to have to be the second part of it. I'm not just signing the bipartisan bill and forgetting about the rest I that I proposed. I proposed a significant piece of legislation in three parts. And all all three parts are equally important.And, by the way, my party you keep everybody tell tells me my party is my party is divided. Well, my party is divided. My party is divided, but my party is also rational. If they can't get every single thing they want, but all that they have in the bill is that before them is good, are they going to vote no ? I don't think so.Q Mr. President?THE PRESIDENT: Yes.Q Mr. President, are you 48 hours ago, it seemed like this deal was kind of in a rough place or didn't necessarily have a path forward. What clinched it? What changed the dynamic that you saw? And also, would you be willing to include a debt ceiling increase in either of the two vehicles you're talking about?THE PRESIDENT: They're probably going (inaudible) be debt ceiling. Whether it's included in either of these bills is not relevant. It depends on what the the leadership in the House and Senate thinks how they should proceed, number one.Number two, you notice, I didn't have that bleak view you all had. You said, 48 hours ago, it didn't look good. It looked good to me 48 hours ago. It looked good to our team 48 hours ago. Seventy-two hours ago, it looked good, too. It wasn't there yet.But you guys know me too well. And it's I'm going to drive you crazy the next four years because I'm going to tell you the truth as I see it. I know the Senate and the House better than most of you know it. I've been my whole life, that's what I've done.It doesn't mean I'm going to turn out to be right all the time, but I'm not going to negotiate with the press while I'm negotiating with the privately with my colleagues. And these are really tough decisions senators have got. I don't, in any way, dismiss what Senator Murphy says about the environment. I don't dismiss it at all. Especially (inaudible). I wrote the bill on the environment. Why would I not be for it?The question is: How much can we get done? And the bottom line is: When all is said and done, does what you agree to preclude, forever, you getting the things you really want? Well, I'm not for that. I'm not going to vote for one of those deals.Secondly, do you get all of what you wanted? Or do you come back and fight another day?I've been President about 150 days. I think we've done fairly well so far. Not because of me, but because of the way the system works.So, it's not I mean, I I know that doesn't answer any of your questions about, Can you tell me when? and How are you going to do it? I just feel that the best way to get a senator or a congressperson who supports the essence of what's already there, but says, I don't have enough of what's there, of other things the best way to get that message across is go to the constituents, and say, Here's here's what's on the table. Do you think your senator, your congressman should vote for that? So, you campaign. The campaign doesn't stop; the partisan piece stops, in terms of, I'm against Charlie Smith or Harry Wilson. But that doesn't stop I mean, that stops. But what doesn't stop is to the saying, You're€', it's like on a last example I'll give. I promise I won't do this to you again. But remember: In 2018, everybody said, Well, you know, we're going to lose. The Democrats are going to lose. You know, the House and Senate, they're not going to make the House is not going to make gains. And I went into over 60 congressional districts. I didn't go after the individual congresspersons who were against making sure that we kept the Affordable Care Act. But I went to their constituents and said, The Affordable Care Act is really important. We had large crowds show up. And I'd say, Here's why I think you should do it. That's why, if I were you, I'd take a look at what Charlie Smith says and Harry Wilson says. He's for it. She's not. Or She's for it; he's not. And guess what? We won, what, 40 some seats? So, it's not just convincing this particular congressperson. It's making a rational case, if you can, in their communities why this is important to get done. And I think the fact that I didn't get everything now at this moment for example, a lot of our housing pieces didn't get passed. We're coming back at it though. We're coming back at it. We're going to make the case. And if I make the case to the public at large the one thing I can say for all of you, you do accurately report what I say. The problem is I disappoint you because I can't answer all your questions and negotiate with you before I negotiate with my colleagues. But I really think the public understands and they're seeing the proof is in what's happening. It's now projected our economy is going to grow above 7 percent this year. Projections from Wall Street to the Fed: It's going to continue to grow. We're going to increase more and guess what? Remember you were asking me and I'm not being critical of you all; I really mean this. It was legitimate questions you were asking me asking me, Well, you know, guess what? Employers can't find workers. I said, Yeah. Pay them more. This is an employee's employee's bargaining chip now what's happening. They're going to have to compete and start playing [sic] hardworking people a decent wage. And, by the way talking inflation the overwhelming consensus is it's going to pop up a little bit and then go back down. No one is talking about, This great, great deal. So, again, if it turns out that what I've done so far what we've done so far is a mistake, it's going to show. It's going to show. The economy is not going to grow, like it wasn't before. People aren't going to have jobs with increased pay, like it was before. People are going to be out of work, like it was before, with no options. Unemployment is going to continue to climb, instead of continue to go down. If that happens, then my policies didn't make a lot of sense, but I'm counting on it not. That's my counting how it's working. I've got to get a helicopter (inaudible). Thank you. Q Mr. President, will you travel to Florida, sir? Q Can we ask you about Florida what you've learned and what you've (inaudible)? THE PRESIDENT: Oh, yes. I apologize. Yes, thank you. (Inaudible) President. I've spoken with, coincidentally, the mayor of Miami-Dade, who was in my office yesterday. And I talked to her today not about that, obviously and so I had a long discussion with her today. I've also spoken with we've been in contact with the Congresswoman Debbie Wasserman Schultz, who has that district. We've gotten in touch with FEMA. They're ready to go. The governor is going to have to we can't they're they're down inspecting in what is what they think is needed. But I'm waiting for the governor to ask for declare an emergency if and especially as we learn more about what the rest might happen with the rest of the building. So, we are on top of it. We are ready to move, from the federal resources, immediately immediately, if in fact we're asked for it. But we can't go in and do it but the FEMA is down there taking a look at what's needed, and including from everything from if the rest of those buildings have to be evacuated as well; finding housing for those people; making sure they have the capacity to both have a place to shelter, and food to eat, et cetera. So that's underway now, and I'm my Chief of Staff has been deeply involved in this from the very beginning. We got the Cabinet involved in it now, in terms of dealing with FEMA. We're working on it. And I made it clear that I say to the people of Florida: Whatever help you want that the federal government can provide, we're waiting. Just ask us; we'll be there. We'll be there. So, thank you so much. I appreciate it. Q Mr. President, one quick que- what are you hoping the Vice President can do at the border tomorrow? THE PRESIDENT: She's done a great job so far. And the reason why it's important that she go down: She's now set up the criteria, having spoken with the President of Mexico and Guatemala, visited the region to know what we need to do. Thank you very much. Q Do you know anything on these reports about moving Afghan nationals to other countries who helped during the war? THE PRESIDENT: They're going to come. We've already begun the process. Those who helped us are not going to be left behind. Q Do you know what country they're going to move to first? THE PRESIDENT: I don't know that. I'll be meeting with the with Ghani tomorrow, the head he's coming to my office. That will be a discussion. But they're welcome here, just like anyone else who risked their lives to help us. Q Thank you, sir.

Coverage:

Shane Kimbrough of NASA and Thomas Pesquet of the European Space Agency conducted the third spacewalk in 10 days outside the International Space Station. The pair worked to install and deploy the second of six new ISS Roll-Out Solar Arrays (iROSA). The arrays will help increase the station's total available power and are the same solar array design that will power elements of the agency's Gateway lunar-orbiting outpost. Melroy Sworn in as NASA Deputy Administrator I, Pamela Ann Melroy. On June 21, former astronaut Pam Melroy took office as NASA's new Deputy Administrator, after being given the oath of office by Administrator Bill Nelson in a ceremony at our Mary W. Jackson NASA Headquarters building in Washington. I'm very honored to be teamed with Administrator Nelson and our Associate Administrator Bob Cabana and the rest of the broader team. It's our intention, I believe to not just lead today's NASA, but also lead us forward into the future and support the generations of fantastic things that NASA will continue to do. Pam Melroy, NASA Deputy Administrator What a grand occasion for us and what an appropriate nominee, now confirmed. And so we've got someone that is extremely skilled, experienced and ready for this job. Bill Nelson, NASA Administrator Melroy was nominated in April by President Biden and confirmed by the Senate on June 17. She is one of only two women to command a space shuttle and logged more than 38 days in space as an astronaut. Next Element for Artemis I Moon Rocket Gets Stacked Workers at our Kennedy Space Center have stacked the launch vehicle stage adapter atop the Space Launch System or SLS rocket's core stage, ahead of the uncrewed Artemis I Moon mission targeted for later this year. The cone shaped adapter connects the core stage and the interim cryogenic propulsion stage (ICPS), which provides the Orion spacecraft with the additional thrust needed to travel tens of thousands of miles beyond the Moon. Artemis I is the first integrated test of Orion and SLS ahead of missions to the Moon with astronauts. Ocean-Observing Satellite Starts Providing Science Data After several months of check-outs and calibrations following its launch last November, the ocean-observing Sentinel-6 Michael Freilich satellite made its first science data available to the public on June 22. The satellite is a U.S.-European collaboration to measure sea surface height and other key ocean features, such as ocean surface wind speed and wave height, and is part of a series of satellites that has been gathering precise ocean height measurements for nearly 30 years. The Sunny Morning Show: Lake Superior Theatre Launching 2021 Season With Unique Musical "The Last Five Years"

Coverage:

The Lake Superior Theatre is preparing for the launch of the 2021 season with the musical production "The Last Five Years" at their waterfront venue in Marquette.

Director Leslie Parkkonen and cast member Eliisa Gladwell spoke about the show with Mark and Walt in the Morning today.

Gladwell said she plays the lead female character, struggling actress Cathy opposite Alex Herman, who plays a successful writer named Jamie.

She said the show features the pair as the only members of the cast and they tell the story, through song, of their failed marriage from two perspectives.

Parkkonen says she is enjoying directing the show, because its unconventional structure consists of Cathy telling her story backwards while Jamie tells his story chronologically; and the two characters only meet once, at their wedding in the middle of the show.

The show runs from July 6-10, 2021
