SCRUTINY IN TEXAS TO DETECT WHETHER EBOLA SPREAD

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 1:49

The man who has become the first Ebola patient to develop symptoms in the United States told officials at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital on Sept. 26 that he had just arrived from West Africa but was not admitted that day because that information was not passed along at the hospital, officials acknowledged Wednesday. The man, Thomas E. Duncan, was sent home under the mistaken belief that he had only a mild fever, a hospital administrator said; the information that he had traveled from Liberia, one of the nations at the heart of the Ebola epidemic, was overlooked. Some members of the Liberian community in the Dallas area said that given the spread of the disease in their home country, they were skeptical of the health information being released publicly, adding that public gatherings were being canceled out of fear of possible contagion.

WHY HASN'T THE U.S. CLOSED ITS AIRPORTS TO TRAVELERS FROM EBOLA-RAVAGED COUNTRIES?

PEDRO ULTERAS / NEW YORK

PKG: 2:03

Now that a man in the United States has been diagnosed with Ebola, some are asking why we haven't stopped allowing people traveling from West Africa into our airports. Thomas Eric Duncan, the patient currently being treated in the Dallas area, boarded a flight from Liberia on Sept. 19 and arrived in Texas on Sept. 20. United Airlines said Wednesday that it was told by the CDC that Duncan had used the airline to travel from Brussels to Dulles International Airport outside Washington, D.C., before flying from Dulles to Dallas-Fort Worth. Authorities have said repeatedly that there is no danger of anyone getting sick from flying with Duncan because was not symptomatic at the time. With every connecting flight carrying passengers who have recently been in the Ebola-ravaged countries of Sierra Leone, Guinea or Liberia, the chances of another exportation increase.

OBAMA: IMMIGRATION ORDERS BY END OF THE YEAR
BLANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / WASHINGTON, DC
PKG: 2:34

President Obama reassured supporters Thursday that he will issue new orders on immigration within the next three months. "It will be taking place between the November elections and the end of the year," Obama said during a gala for the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute. With an immigration bill blocked in the Republican-run House, Obama is reportedly considering a series of orders that would grant status to many of the 11.5 million people who are in country illegally. Obama and aides said they are delaying executive orders on immigration until after the Nov. 4 congressional elections because immigration has become such a volatile political issue.

US GOVERNMENT CATCHING UP TO AIRLINES IN STRATEGY TO STOP EBOLA
"IN ITS TRACKS"

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS
PKG: 2:05

After major airlines jumped to suspend flights and take other precautions in response to the Ebola outbreak, the U.S. government is starting to catch up -- ramping up efforts to keep the deadly virus from spreading. The announcement this week by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that it had confirmed the first diagnosed case of the disease in the U.S. has heightened that coordinated campaign. Currently, travelers are being checked for fever before they are allowed to board flights leaving several West African nations, the epicenter of the outbreak. But the challenge is to stay vigilant and monitor people after that initial screening.

MIDEAST TURMOIL KEEPS GASOLINE AT 45 CENTS IN OIL STATES
LUIS MEGID / SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA
PKG: 1:43

Subsidies in Persian Gulf states that keep gasoline prices as low as 45 cents a gallon are proving difficult to dismantle amid growing regional turmoil. Ministers from six Arab Gulf nations delayed action to curtail the support when they met Sept. 11 in Kuwait, Ali Al-Omar, Kuwaiti Oil Minister, said that day. State-run Saudi Arabian Oil Co. warned in May that it will have "unacceptably low levels" of oil to sell in the next two decades if domestic power use keeps rising at 8 percent annually. The region currently supplies 24 percent of the world's crude. The oil-rich monarchies, which rank among the top per-capita energy consumers, have largely averted domestic discontent of the kind that sparked the Arab Spring protests and support for Islamic State in northern Iraq.

COMPANY RECALLS GROUND BEEF AFTER METAL COMPLAINTS

VO: 0:23

Sam Kane Beef Processors of Corpus Christi, Texas, has recalled 90,987 pounds of ground beef products after consumers complained about finding pieces of metal inside the meat, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said Saturday. The USDA said four consumers complained, with one person reporting a chipped tooth. The pieces of metal were reported to be about 3mm, a USDA press release said. Alfred Bausch, general manager for the company, said all the products were shipped to Texas retail outlets. The USDA said the products bear the establishment number "337" inside the USDA mark of inspection. The press release said this is a Class II recall, meaning "there is a remote probability of adverse health consequences from the use of the product."

ELECTIONS WITHOUT HISPANICS COULD HAPPEN AS SOME ARE CONSIDERING NOT EXERCISING THEIR RIGHT FOR BEING DECEIVED OR REJECTED

LUIS MEGID / SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

PKG 1:46

Synopsis:

The historic tide of Latino voters that lifted President Barack Obama in 2012 and raised alarms among Texas Republicans may be ebbing with the approach of the 2014 elections, when the GOP is expected to make gains in Congress and maintain its dominance in Texas. While the rapid growth of the nation's Hispanic population has fueled the hopes of Democrats both nationally and in Texas, some leaders say it could be a struggle to turn out Latino voters with the current stalemate on immigration reform, a strong driver of Hispanic voter mobilization. Compounding the challenge is historically low Hispanic participation in midterm elections and a widespread perception among activists that the White House put off action on immigration reforms this year out of political expediency. Hispanic leaders across the nation worry that frustration over the delay on promised executive action could cause a backlash of Latino voter apathy. Those doubts have contributed to a growing sense of pessimism among Latino leaders as well as Democrats, who stand to lose seats in the U.S. House and possibly control of the Senate at the end of this year. The Texas Republican Party, meanwhile, has turbo-charged its Hispanic outreach this year in response to the efforts of pro-Democratic groups like Battleground Texas.

FIGHTS AGAINST EBOLA IN THE UNITED STATES

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG 2:09

Synopsis:

President Obama met with his national security team to discuss ways to better screen airline passengers in the U.S. for Ebola, as well as how to beef up those efforts overseas. The President also criticized other nations for not doing more to stop the spread of Ebola. As Mr. Obama chastised other countries we learned a Spanish nurse became the first person outside West Africa to contract the disease. Back on U.S. shores, the Ebola patient in Dallas, Thomas Eric Duncan, remains in critical condition. We learned yesterday he was given an experimental drug on Saturday that has only been tested on animals. Meanwhile, freelance journalist, Ashoka Mukpo, is being treated in a biocontainment wing at the Nebraska Medical Center. He walked off his transport plane yesterday and his family said his symptoms are mild right now, but expected to worsen.

MUSIC THERAPY FOR ALZHEIMER
DANAY RIVERO / WEST PALM BEACH, FLORIDA

PKG 2:02

Synopsis:

Music has power-especially for individuals with Alzheimer's disease and related dementias. And it can spark compelling outcomes even in the very late stages of the disease. When used appropriately, music can shift mood, manage stress-induced agitation, stimulate positive interactions, facilitate cognitive function, and coordinate motor movements. This happens because rhythmic and other well-rehearsed responses require little to no cognitive or mental processing. They are influenced by the motor center of the brain that responds directly to auditory rhythmic cues. A person's ability to engage in music, particularly rhythm playing and singing, remains intact late into the disease process because, again, these activities do not mandate cognitive functioning for success.

HEALTH OFFICIALS PROMISE EXTRA AIRPORT SCREENING FOR EBOLA
VO: 0:20

Faced with growing concern over the spread of the Ebola virus, public health officials on Tuesday promised extra measures to screen airline passengers arriving into the United States. But they remained opposed to more draconian travel restrictions that they say would cause more problems than they would solve. Among the measures under consideration by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, temperatures of at-risk passengers would be checked, or they might be subject to detailed questioning upon their arrival in the United States. Dr. Thomas R. Frieden, the agency's director, provided no specific details, a reminder of how easily the disease can travel and how difficult it is to detect.

ASSURANCES ARE GIVEN AND A DEPUTY GOES HOME, BUT EBOLA FEARS PERSIST

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 1:51

So far, there is no evidence the Ebola virus has spread in this vast metropolitan area of 6.5 million people. But fear has. Officials on Thursday announced that a local sheriff's deputy examined for possible infection with the virus had tested negative and was sent home from the hospital. None of the other 48 people who officials say had contact with Thomas Eric Duncan, the Liberian man who died of Ebola at a hospital here Wednesday, have showed symptoms of infection. Because no one has been exposed in 11 days, officials say, the likelihood of a new case is diminishing. But live images on local television of an ambulance racing the deputy to the hospital on Wednesday were enough to convince many here that Ebola was more dangerous than officials were letting on.

LA GUARDIA ON STRIKE, 58% OF AMERICANS WANT TO BAN FLIGHTS FROM W. AFRICA

ENNY PICHARDO / NEW YORK

PKG: 2:09

Airplane cabin cleaning crews at New York's LaGuardia International Airport began a 24-hour strike on Wednesday, citing, in part, possible exposure to the Ebola virus. Meanwhile, a poll found most Americans want flights banned from Ebola-ravaged areas. Around 200 Air Serv employees who work on domestic flights to LaGuardia began their strike on Wednesday evening. The group is seeking to unionize, and they said health and safety issues on the job - including exposure to blood, feces, and vomit without protective gear - are the main reasons. They are also concerned about possible exposure to the Ebola virus, which claimed its first victim in the United States on Wednesday.

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS
PKG: 1:12

The medical records of the Liberian man who died of the Ebola virus, released Friday by the man's family, raised new questions about the treatment he received when he first sought care at a hospital here. The man, Thomas Eric Duncan, 42, had a high fever - his temperature was 103 degrees - during his four-hour visit to the emergency room of Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital on Sept. 25, according to 1,400 pages of medical records that Mr. Duncan's family provided to The Associated Press. Mr. Duncan reported severe pain, rating it an eight on a scale of one to 10. His fever was marked with an exclamation point in the hospital's record-keeping system.

EBOLA

ENNY PICHARDO / NEW YORK
PKG: 1:59

As Ebola continues to ravage West Africa and fears grow that the virus will spread around the globe, enhanced screenings began on Saturday at Kennedy Airport in New York. Travelers coming from three hard-hit African countries are being singled out, having their temperatures taken and questioned about their possible exposure to Ebola. Kennedy was the first of five American airports to introduce Ebola screening protocols, and the new measures were the latest indication of the risk that the disease presented. Airports in Canada and Europe plan to take similar measures in coming days.

Kmart, owned by Sears Holdings, announced Friday that it's become the latest retailer to suffer a security breach to its payment data systems. In a release, the company said that its information technology team discovered the breach on Thursday and that it's since launched a full investigation. The breach, according to Kmart, started in early September. "Our Kmart store payment data systems were infected with a form of malware that was undetectable by current anti-virus systems," according to a statement by the retailer. The company says it was able to "quickly remove the malware," but that "certain debit and credit card numbers have been compromised."

Concerns about the Ebola virus were heightened Sunday when a health care worker in Texas had a positive preliminary test for the disease. If confirmed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the worker's case would mark the first known transmission of Ebola in the United States and the second-ever diagnosis in the country. The number of deaths attributed to the current Ebola outbreak has climbed to 4,033, the World Health Organization reported Friday. The tally brings the total number of confirmed, probable and suspected cases of Ebola to 8,399. The numbers were reported from Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Spain and the United States.

U.S. CDC HEAD CRITICIZED FOR BLAMING 'PROTOCOL BREACH' AS NURSE GETS EBOLA

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 1:59

Some healthcare experts are bristling at the assertion by a top U.S. health official that a "protocol breach" caused a Dallas nurse to be infected with Ebola while caring for a dying patient, saying the case instead shows how far the nation's hospitals are from adequately training staff to deal with the deadly virus. Dr. Thomas Frieden, director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, made the declaration on Sunday at a news conference and called for an investigation into how the unidentified nurse became infected while caring for Liberian national Thomas Eric Duncan, the first Ebola patient diagnosed in the United States. Duncan died last week at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital.

NEW CHECKS FOR PASSENGERS FLYING FROM WEST AFRICA

BLANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / NUEVA YORK

PKG: 2:18

New York's JFK International Airport is the first of five airports to add enhanced screening for Ebola. Over the weekend, passengers flying into the U.S. from West Africa faced the tougher protocol at JFK, and more thorough screenings will begin at other airports soon, but some members of Congress say it's not enough. Starting Thursday, Chicago's O'Hare Airport, Dulles International Airport outside of Washington D.C., Hartsfield-Jackson Airport in Atlanta and Newark International Airport in New Jersey will all have the new screening in place, reports CBS News transportation correspondent Jeff Pegues. U.S. authorities say those airports manage more than 94 percent of travelers from Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea, the West African countries hardest hit by Ebola. Despite the stepped-up measures, even the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention acknowledges the new system is not fool-proof.

NEW CASES AND THREATS OF EBOLA

PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG 1:37

Synopsis:

There are new details about that Texas nurse stricken with Ebola. 26-year-old Nina Pham received a potentially life- saving blood transfusion from Dr. Kent Brantly, the missionary doctor who recently survived Ebola, himself. Health experts say his blood is now packed with antibodies that might help fight the virus. Members of Pham's parish say she is in good spirits. Officials say she is now in stable condition, but how Pham got infected is still a mystery, and has some of her colleagues fearful. That fear is spreading around the country, with several people who appear sick and having some connection to Africa, finding themselves in isolation. As Pham was being treated in isolation Tuesday, the World Health Organization projected that West Africa could see up to 10,000 new Ebola cases a week within two months and confirmed the death rate in the current outbreak has risen to 70 percent. The agency gave the figures during a news conference in Geneva. Previously, the WHO had estimated the Ebola mortality rate at around 50 percent.

Synopsis:

During a bilingual news briefing about preparations for Ebola patients at NewYork-Presbyterian Healthcare System's New York Hospital Queens, conducted in Chinese and English, the clinical director of the hospital's patient care services and the hospital's infection control director, Mimi Lim, the chairman of the hospital's emergency medicine department, Mark Kindschuh, the hospital's emergency services director, Suzanne Pugh, and the director of the hospital's The Dr. James J. Rahal Jr. Division of Infectious Diseases, Sorana Segal-Maurer, participated. Federal health authorities are telling the nation's hospitals to "think Ebola." Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Director Dr. Tom Frieden is urging hospitals to watch for patients with fever or symptoms of Ebola who have traveled from the three Ebola-stricken African nations in the past 21 days. He spoke Monday after a nurse in Dallas became the first person to catch the disease within the United States. She had treated a Liberian man who died at the hospital after bringing the disease from Liberia.

Synopsis:

All health workers treating an Ebola patient should wear personal protective gear, the CDC says. The exact gear can vary. A hazardous material-type suit usually includes a gown, two sets of gloves, a face mask, and an eye shield. There are strict protocols for how to use these tools correctly. The Ebola virus, which is transmitted through bodily fluids of an actively ill patient, is not highly infectious, but breaches of protocol in the removal of personal protective equipment can increase risk.

Some of the claims include that Thomas Duncan was left for several hours in the general population at the hospital even though he was showing symptoms of Ebola, and that initial nurses were not required to wear specialized masks and face shields. The hospital says patient and employee safety is the greatest priority and compliance is taken very seriously. Also, that there are numerous measures in place to provide a safe working environment, including mandatory annual training and a 24/7 hotline and other mechanisms that allow for anonymous reporting.

BANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG 2:24

Synopsis:

Concerns over the transmission of the Ebola virus were heightened after reports emerged that a second Texas nurse, who was diagnosed with the virus, had traveled on a plane. However, public health experts say the risk of contracting Ebola is very low on commercial flights, provided air travelers observe some simple precautions as the virus is not airborne but, contracted through direct contact with bodily fluids of a person who is infected. Masks won't protect passengers. Planes are wiped down an average of every 30 days. Among recommendations: Disinfect your area, wash hands and use sanitizers, be mindful of touching your face, cover exposed skin. Meanwhile, crews at Los Angeles International Airport on board flights arriving from international cities are reportedly being told to be on alert for any passengers who visited West Africa.

No, illegal immigrants haven't carried Ebola across the border. The Ebola outbreak isn't a conspiracy. President Obama did not sign an order mandating detention of Americans. Bloggers are also behind a bogus claim that the president signed an executive order mandating the detention of Americans who show signs of 'respiratory illness. There is no promise of an Ebola-free America, what officials and Obama have repeatedly said is that while there's a chance an Ebola case could appear in the United States, the possibility of an outbreak is extremely low. PEDRO ULTRERAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

Synopsis:

New CDC guidelines for health care workers treating Ebola New guidelines for the treatment of Ebola expected to be issued Monday by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) will require healthcare workers to be completely covered up when treating patients for the virus, and be monitored while donning and removing protective garb. The new, more stringent guidelines have been developed as a response to two nurses at a Dallas hospital becoming infected with Ebola after treating Thomas Eric Duncan, a Liberian national who became the first person in the United States to die of the virus Oct. 8.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said those caring for Duncan were vulnerable because some of their skin was exposed. He said that earlier guidelines released by the CDC were based on those used by the World Health Organization (WHO) for treatment in remote places, often outdoors, and without intensive training for health workers.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration put out a recall notice Monday for defective airbags and urged people whose cars are equipped with them to take action immediately. More than 4.7 million vehicles are involved in the recall. At least four people have died when inflator mechanisms ruptured on the air bags, spraying the passengers with metal fragments. NHTSA warned drivers whose cars have been recalled as a result of faulty inflators to take them to the dealer immediately. Safety experts said about 12 million vehicles worldwide have been recalled because of the problem. The airbags are made by Takata and are in place in some Toyota, Honda, Mazda, BMW, Nissan and General Motors models. NHTSA said it was particularly urgent for vehicles owners in Florida, Puerto Rico, Guam, Saipan, American Samoa, Virgin Islands and Hawaii to take immediate action.

8 MILLION CARS RECALL DUE TO DEFECTS
VO: 30 SEC.

Synopsis:

The U.S. government is now urging owners of nearly 8 million cars and trucks to have the air bags repaired because of potential danger to drivers and passengers. But the effort is being complicated by confusing information and a malfunctioning website. The government's auto safety agency says that inflator mechanisms in the air bags can rupture, causing metal fragments to fly out when the bags are deployed. The inflators are made by Japanese parts supplier Takata Corp. Safety advocates say at least four people have died from the problem, which they claim could affect more than 20 million cars nationwide. On Wednesday, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration added 3.1 million vehicles to an initial warning covering 4.7 million cars and SUVs. Car owners might have difficulty determining if their vehicle is equipped with the potentially dangerous air bags. The warning covers certain models made by BMW, Chrysler, Ford, General Motors, Mazda, Honda, Mitsubishi, Nissan, Subaru and Toyota.

SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

VO: 25 SEC.

Synopsis:

Social security checks will go up by 1-point-7 percent next year. That equals about 22-dollars more each month, according to the social security administration. In 2015, the average retired worker will receive 15,936-dollars a year. The modest increase is tied to the latest consumer price index, the government's main inflation measure. It showed prices increased 1-point-7 percent in the past 12 months.

VOTER IDENTIFICATION LAW

PEDRO ROJAS / MCALLEN, TEXAS

PKG

Synopsis:

The Supreme Court on Saturday allowed Texas to use its strict voter identification law in the November election. The court's order, issued just after 5 a.m., was unsigned and contained no reasoning. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg issued a six-page dissent saying the court's action risks denying the right to vote to hundreds of thousands of eligible voters. The court's order was an interim move addressing emergency applications filed Wednesday, and a trial judge's ruling striking down the law will still be appealed. But the Supreme Court's action set the ground rules in Texas for the current election. Early voting there starts Monday, which helps explain the court's rush to issue the order as soon as Justice Ginsburg had finished her dissent.

ONE MORE CASE OF EBOLA IN THE U.S

VILMA TARAZONA / MIAMI, FLORIDA

PKG 1:30

Synopsis:

A doctor who recently returned from Guinea has tested positive for Ebola -- the first case of the deadly virus in New York City and the fourth diagnosed in the United States. Here is a timeline of Craig Spencer's movements since he got back from the West African nation. Spencer came back to the United States last week after treating Ebola patients in Guinea, where he worked for Doctors without Borders. He completed his work in Guinea on October 12 and left the country two days later via Brussels, Belgium. He arrived at John F. Kennedy International Airport on October 17, but he exhibited no symptoms of the virus until Thursday morning, said Dr. Mary Travis Bassett, New York City's health commissioner. The 33-year-old did not have any symptoms just after his return, but he developed a fever, nausea, pain and fatigue Thursday morning, authorities said. He began feeling sluggish a couple of days ago, but his fever spiked to 100.3 degrees Fahrenheit (about 38 Celsius) the day his symptoms appeared.

LATINO VOTE IN OREGON

Synopsis:

Last October 14, 2014 was the deadline to register to vote in Oregon. There are nearly 150,000 eligible Latino voters in Oregon, and yet our representation in office does not reflect this power. A 2012 Pew report notes that there are 146,000 Hispanic eligible voters in Oregon, making it the 21st largest Hispanic eligible voter population nationally. According to the Oregon Secretary of State, residents of the state can register TODAY in-person at a county elections office or online. In order to register online, eligible voters must have a current Oregon driver's license or state ID card issued by the Oregon Department of Motor Vehicles.

EBOLA PANIC BEGINS TO GRIP THE CITY OF NEW YORK
BLANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / NEW YORK

PKG 2:08

Synopsis:

A doctor who became New York City's first Ebola patient was praised for getting treatment immediately upon showing symptoms, and health officials stressed that the nation's most populous city need not fear his wide-ranging travel in the days before his illness began. Mayor Bill de Blasio and Gov. Andrew Cuomo urged residents not to be alarmed by the doctor's diagnosis Thursday, even as they described him riding the subway, taking a cab and bowling since returning to New York from Guinea a week ago. De Blasio said all city officials followed "clear and strong" protocols in their handling and treatment of him and added that there is no reason to be alarmed, "New Yorkers who have not been exposed are not at all at risk." The doctor, Craig Spencer, a member of Doctors Without Borders, reported Thursday morning coming down with a 100.3-degree fever and diarrhea. He was being treated in an isolation ward at Manhattan's Bellevue Hospital, a designated Ebola center.

AMERICAN'S FEAR FOR EBOLA
BLANCA VILCHEZ / NEW YORK

PKG 2:23

Synopsis:

Ebola worries have eased slightly in the latest poll, despite a broad sense among Americans that their local hospitals are unprepared to deal with the virus - and continued preference for a more robust response by the federal government. After the difficulties at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital in Dallas, where two nurses were infected, just 29 percent in this national survey think the staff at their local hospitals is adequately trained to deal with Ebola cases. Six in 10 think not. The fact that both nurses recovered - and just one further case has been identified - may have done at least a little to calm fears of a broad outbreak. In interviews Thursday through Sunday, 36 percent of Americans expressed worry that they or an immediate family member might catch the Ebola virus, down by 7 percentage points from two weeks before. And while 60 percent are concerned about an epidemic occurring in the United States, that's eased from 65 percent.

Coast Guard spokesman said the incident occurred about seven miles east of Boca Raton in waters of the Atlantic Ocean, The rescue came only two days after 13 Cuban rafters attempted to reach Miami in a makeshift boat that broke apart near the Turkey Point nuclear power plant. Eleven of the migrants were rescued or made it safely to land and two were still missing Wednesday. The Coast Guard said it was still searching for the two and that one of the boats involved in the search helped rescue the migrants that plunged into the water Wednesday near Boca Raton.

Miami's Hispanic population is no longer overwhelmingly Cuban. Nicaraguans, Colombians, Dominicans and Venezuelans have all made their way to South Florida, and they are changing the demographics-and politics- of the region. One way this shift has expressed itself is in the 2012 election of Joe Garcia. Garcia upended David Rivera, a Republican congressman who had been dogged by allegations of ethical impropriety throughout his term in Congress at the same time that Barack Obama was carrying the 26th District by a seven-point margin over Mitt Romney. But Garcia has had ethical problems of his own, and faces a well-funded, high-quality challenger in Carlos Curbelo. The only poll in the race shows Curbelo up, but it is dangerous to read too much into a single poll. This looks like a tossup.

CHALLENGING EBOLA AND THE GOVERNMENT

LOURDES MELUZA / WASHINGTON, DC

Synopsis:

PKG 2:05

A legal challenge over mandatory Ebola quarantines is brewing in Maine, but will likely have implications in several states as a growing number have instituted quarantines of medical workers returning from West Africa, who have had direct contact with Ebola patients. Kaci Hickox, the nurse who was forced into quarantine in a tent in New Jersey for 3 days, is vowing to defy the state of Maine's mandatory quarantine order, beginning today. The state is determined to enforce the order in court, but Hicox argues their position is not based on science, since she's tested negative for Ebola and showing no symptoms. President Obama said yesterday, surrounded by health workers, that U.S. doctors and nurses volunteering in the fight against Ebola are heroes who must be treated with dignity and respect.

A video of a young woman being sexually harassed on the streets of New York has gone viral with over 5 million views in 24 hours. Filmed secretly for over 10 hours by actor Shoshana B Roberts, the video was part of non-profit organisation Hollaback's campaign to end street harassment. Roberts has received rape threats in response to a video detailing the harassment, Hollaback said. There were more than 100 instances of verbal street harassment recorded during the 10 hours, not including countless winks and whistles. In a two-minute video clip from the recordings, actor Roberts was instructed to smile, told: At one point in the video a man walked alongside her silently for five minutes. Another followed her and offered to give her his number. The video has emerged as a new study ranked 15 major capitals based on how safe women consider their public transport systems to be. New York, where the Roberts video was recorded, ranked highest with women there claiming to enjoy low levels of harassment and a general feeling of security and confidence.

SCRUTINY IN TEXAS TO DETECT WHETHER EBOLA SPREAD
PEDRO ROJAS / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 1:49

The man who has become the first Ebola patient to develop symptoms in the United States told officials at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital on Sept. 26 that he had just arrived from West Africa but was not admitted that day because that information was not passed along at the hospital, officials acknowledged Wednesday. The man, Thomas E. Duncan, was sent home under the mistaken belief that he had only a mild fever, a hospital administrator said; the information that he had traveled from Liberia, one of the nations at the heart of the Ebola epidemic, was overlooked. Some members of the Liberian community in the Dallas area said that given the spread of the disease in their home country, they were skeptical of the health information being released publicly, adding that public gatherings were being canceled out of fear of possible contagion.

THE UNITED STATES PREPARES ITS HOSPITALS TO DEAL WITH A POTENTIAL EBOLA THREAT

On September 30, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention announced the first confirmed case of a patient being diagnosed with Ebola in the United States. Although that news is frightening, it does not mean that there is going to be an outbreak in the US on the scale of the one that is currently happening in West Africa. Public health officials know how to stop Ebola in its tracks. This is a disease that we can control. To do that, a whole system has to work together. Because there is no vaccine for Ebola, and no cure, stopping the disease is a matter of getting the right people to do the right things, at the right time.

ENTEROVIRUS D68 MAY LINK TO PARALYSIS, SPREADS AMONG CHILDREN

The original source of the rising number of EV D68 in the United States is unknown. So far a reported four children with EV D68 have died nationwide and many have developed paralysis or weakness in limbs. Polio, a form of Enterovirus according to the CDPH, has been largely eradicated from the U.S. However, the fact that EV D68 is also a form of Enterovirus makes a possible connection to paralysis not surprising, Dr. Carole Glazer told reporters on a CDPH teleconference. EV D68 is classified as a non-Polio Enterovirus and is under investigation for whether the virus is causing the cases of paralysis.

RESTAURANT SEXUAL HARASSMENT
ARLENA AMARO / MIAMI, FLORIDA
PKG 1:55

Synopsis:

When it comes to working for tips, one add-on isn't quite so welcome: widespread sexual harassment. Tipped restaurant workers are suffering from endemic sexual harassment in their workplaces, thanks to their minimum wage of $2.13 per hour that has remained unchanged since 1991. That's according to a new study from Restaurant Opportunities Center (ROC) United, a group that advocates for the rights of restaurant workers. The federal minimum wage is $7.25 an hour. Because tipped workers like waitresses depend on customers to make sure they earn enough to make ends meet, many feel they must put up with unwanted behavior, the study found. Given that tipped restaurant workers are predominantly women, representing two-thirds of country's wait staff, the issue raises the question of how the economic uncertainty of tips may lead to gender-based sexual harassment.

VOTER ID LAWS IN TEXAS, WISCONSIN BLOCKED BY THE COURTS

A federal judge struck down Texas' strict voter ID requirement on Thursday, likening the law to a poll tax deliberately meant to suppress minority voter turnout. The decision came only hours after the U.S. Supreme Court blocked a similar measure in Wisconsin, and less than a month before Election Day. The twin rulings released Thursday evening represent major and somewhat surprising blows to largely Republican-backed voter identification rules sweeping the nation that have generally been upheld in previous rulings. In 2011, Texas' law is considered among the nation's most stringent and had even been derided in court by the Justice Department as blatant discrimination. Wisconsin's law was passed the same year and has remained a similar political flashpoint.

In a recent study from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), U.S. states underperformed their regional counterparts in other countries in a number of important metrics that gauge well-being. The OECD's newly released study, "How's Life in Your Region?: Measuring Regional and Local Well-Being for Policy Making," compares nine important factors that contribute to well-being. Applying an equal weight to each of these factors, 24/7 Wall St. rated New Hampshire as the best state for quality of life.

A FEDERAL COURT OF APPEALS REJECTS ALASKA PROHIBITION OF SAME SEX MARRIAGE, THIS WEEK MORE STATES JOIN THE LIST OF PROHIBITION LIFTS

SAMUEL REIVERA / DENVER, COLORADO

PKG 1:52

Synopsis:

Alaska and Arizona become part of the growing list of same-sex marriage states, now numbering 31. And Wyoming soon could be #32. The Supreme Court turned down Alaska's request Friday to block gays and lesbians from marrying. Another federal district judge set the clock running toward gay marriage in Wyoming next week. The three states thus become the latest dominoes to fall following a series of federal appeals court rulings striking down same-sex marriage bans -- rulings that the Supreme Court refused to second-guess. There are now 31 states where gays and lesbians can wed, up from 19 less than two weeks ago. Three others in addition to Wyoming -- Kansas, Montana and South Carolina -- are bound by the geographic reach of the appeals courts that have ruled. And four more -- Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee -- await an appeals court ruling that could come any day. Only seven states remain in which lower courts have not started the ball rolling by striking down gay marriage bans: Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

The average price of a gallon of gasoline in the United States dropped 12 cents in the past three weeks to its lowest point in nearly a year, driven by the latest round of falling oil prices, according to the Lundberg survey released on Sunday. Prices fell to an average of $3.26 per gallon for regular grade gasoline, according to the survey conducted on Oct. 10. Prices have fallen for the past 16 weeks, survey publisher Trilby Lundberg said. The price of a gallon is nearly 13 cents below what it was a year ago and is at its lowest point since Nov. 22, she added. The price peaked on May 2 and is down 46.5 cents since then. Gas prices fall under $3 a gallon in New Jersey on Oct. 6,

The 29 year old health care worker alerted the CDC but, says that was authorized to board a flight because her body temperature was not above 100.3 degrees. In the case of Amber Vinson, the Dallas nurse who flew commercially as she was becoming ill with Ebola, one health official said "somebody dropped the ball."

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said that Vinson called the agency several times before flying, saying that she had a fever with a temperature of 99.5 degrees. But because her fever wasn't 100.4 degrees or higher, she didn't officially fall into the group of "high risk" and was allowed to fly. Officials in the U.S. have been trying to calm fears over the Ebola crisis, but time and again events have overtaken their assurances.

DALLAS HOSPITAL TAKES MEASURES AND NURSE NINA PHAM ARRIVED AT MARYLAND HOSPITAL

BLANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG 2:28

Synopsis:

Ebola-stricken nurse Nina Pham arrived at the National Institutes of Health hospital in Bethesda, Md. at 11:50 p.m. Thursday, just hours after she said goodbye to her Dallas medical colleagues in a tearful and emotional moment caught on video. The 26-year-old health care worker was one of two nurses at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital Dallas to test positive for the deadly virus in the days after patient Thomas Eric Duncan's Oct. 8 death. Doctors and Pham decided she should transfer hospitals because the Dallas hospital is equipped to deal with only three Ebola patients. The hospital wants to keep beds available in case more people need to be treated for the virus.

EXPERTS OPPOSE EBOLA TRAVEL BAN, SAYING IT WOULD CUT OFF WORST-HIT COUNTRIES

BLANCA ROSA VILCHEZ / NEW YORK

PKG: 2:21

Fear of Ebola is spreading faster than the disease itself, and the growing paranoia in the United States is fueling calls to impose a travel ban on people coming from the three West African nations struggling with the outbreak. In a politically tense climate, with the Nov. 4 elections just weeks away, the issue is being supercharged by partisan considerations with prominent Republicans calling for a ban, including John Boehner, the House speaker. But public health officials say a travel ban would be ineffective and difficult to carry out and would not entirely prevent people in Ebola-hit countries from entering the United States.

RELEASED AFTER IMMIGRATION HOLDS DENIED

LILIANA ESCALANTE / LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

PKG 1:37

Synopsis:

Immigration officials say local authorities across the U.S. released thousands of immigrants from jails this year despite efforts to take them into federal custody, including more than 3,000 with previous felony charges or convictions. The numbers are the first time federal immigration authorities have publicly detailed how many times local agencies have refused to comply with their requests. They highlight the friction between the federal government and police and sheriff's departments, some of which say holding immigrants beyond their release dates harms community policing efforts. In the first eight months of this year, immigration agents filed roughly 105,000 requests for local agencies to hold immigrants for up to 48 hours after they were eligible for release on the allegations for which they initially were arrested, said Virginia Kice, a spokeswoman for Immigration and Customs Enforcement. The agents wanted the immigrants held so they could take them into federal custody and start deportation proceedings.

AIRPORTS PROCEDURES TO CONTROL EBOLA

ENNY PICHARDO / NEW JERSEY

PKG 1:55

Synopsis:

The United States ratcheted up its safeguards against Ebola on Tuesday, requiring travelers from three countries at the center of an epidemic in West Africa to fly into one of five major airports conducting enhanced screening for the virus. Restrictions on passengers whose trips originated in Liberia, Sierra Leone or Guinea were announced by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and due to go into effect on Wednesday. The precautions stop well short of the travel ban sought by some U.S. lawmakers to prevent more Ebola cases in the United States. Affected travelers will have their temperatures checked for signs of a fever that may indicate Ebola infection, among other protocols, at New York's John F. Kennedy, New Jersey's Newark, Washington Dulles, Atlanta, and Chicago's O'Hare international airport.

SEARS WILL CLOSE STORES LAYING OFF 5,000 EMPLOYEES

VO: 25 SEC.

Synopsis:

Sears Holdings Corp is shuttering more than 100 stores and laying off at least 5,457 employees, investor website Seeking Alpha reported on Thursday, indicating the struggling retailer may be stepping up store closures. Sears said in August it had closed 96 stores in the six months since February and planned to close a total of 130 underperforming stores during the full fiscal year. It added at the time that it may shutter additional stores beyond the 130 target. Sears spokesman Chris Brathwaite declined to comment on the number of planned closures, saying the company would provide an update when it reports quarterly earnings next month. Reducing operations to the best performing stores is key to Sears' revival strategy, he said. Sears shares rose 5.9 percent to $36.46 on Nasdaq at mid-afternoon.

Police have responded to a high school north of Seattle following reports of a shooting. Local television stations reported Friday that two people were being airlifted to a hospital. Live video showed students being evacuated from Marysville-Pilchuck High School in Marysville, near Everett. 2 of the victims (ages 14 and 15) were cousins of the shooter. There is no word about more injuries or deaths, this thanks to a corageous teacher who ran to the school cafeteria once the shots started to ring. The female teacher was able to distract the agressor long enough to keep him from re-loading his weapon.

Investigators said they were still searching for a motive and had recovered a .40 caliber handgun from the school. The shooter targeted a cafeteria-table gathering of his friends and family, prompting a lockdown of the school and a flood of heavily armed police, law enforcement officials and witnesses said. Fifteen-year-old Andrew Fryberg was in critical condition with a gunshot wound to the head, and Nate Hatch, 14, was in serious condition with a gunshot to the jaw, hospital officials said. The two female victims, Shaylee Chuckalnaskit, 14, and Gia Soriano, 14, remained in critical condition Saturday at Providence Regional Medical Center in Everett, said Dr. Joanne Roberts. The incident sent shock waves through the Tribes and broader Marysville, a town of about 63,000 people, with many voicing disbelief that Fryberg could be responsible. There were also hints on social media at a disappointment of some sort. Messages at times suggested signs of heartbreak and anger. A school official who requested anonymity and a friend of one of the female victims said a girl had recently rejected Fryberg.

Detecting cancer could be as easy as popping a pill in the near future. Google's head of life sciences took to the stage at the Wall Street Journal Digital conference to reveal that the tech giant's secretive Google x lab has been working on a wearable device that couples with nanotechnology to detect disease within the body. The plan is to test whether tiny particles coated "magnetized" with antibodies can catch disease in its nascent stages. The tiny particles are essentially programmed to spread throughout the body via pill and then latch on to the abnormal cells. The wearable device then "calls" the nanoparticles back to ask them what's going on with the body and to find out if the person who swallowed the pill has cancer or other diseases.

HOW THE CDC WILL MAKE SURE EBOLA DOESN'T SPREAD IN US
MARIA EUGENIA PAYAN - MIAMI, FLORIDA
PKG: 2:27

To stop the deadly virus from spreading in the U.S., health officials said they have already started tracing anyone involved with the first Ebola patient to be diagnosed here. Officials from the U.S. Centers of Disease Control confirmed Tuesday that the first Ebola patient has been diagnosed in the U.S., after arriving from Liberia. In a press conference in Dallas, officials were prepared and had already started tracing people who had come into contact with the unidentified Ebola patient now being treated in Dallas. I have no doubt that we will control this case of Ebola so that it does not spread widely in this country, said Frieden, who confirmed a CDC team was also en route to help track anyone connected to the infected patient. To track any potential exposures and stop the outbreak, Frieden said medical officials will first interview the patient and then family members. From there officials will outline and investigate all of the patient's movements after the symptoms appeared and he was contagious. They will build concentric circles, with one circle representing everyone the patient could have exposed and then a second including all the other people those initial contacts have interacted with. With that we put together a map essentially that identifies the time, the place, the level of the contact, said Frieden. Then we use a concentric circle approach to identify those contacts, who might have had the highest risk of exposure, those with intermediate risk.

CO: POSSIBLE LINK BETWEEN ENTEROVIRUS, PARALYSIS

VO: 32

Mysterious cases of paralysis in Colorado continue to baffle medical experts across the nation. All of the cases affect children. Experts from the centers for disease control are now here in Denver to help the investigation. Many questions remain at children's hospital about what may have caused paralysis in ten children admitted since August 8th. Six children showed enough improvement to be sent home, though some still have minor paralysis. Doctor Samuel Dominguez says one thing is certain. There is no solid link to Enterovirus 68. Four of the children had the Enterovirus. Others did not. Doctors are still waiting for test results on one patient. Another recovered from a very mild case and hadn't been tested. Doctors say the paralysis is being caused by inflammation of the spinal cord

ANTIBIOTICS LINKED TO CHILD OBESITY

VO: 28

A baby's growth is measured during a check-up at Children's Hospital Boston. A new study finds that babies who take a lot of antibiotics by age 2 are slightly more likely to become obese. Children who take a lot of antibiotics before age 2 are slightly more likely than others to become obese, according to a new study. The paper is the latest in a growing field of research examining the effects of modern life on the trillions of beneficial bacteria living in and on the human body. While the research doesn't definitively prove that the drugs make children gain weight, it's consistent with earlier studies in humans and animals linking antibiotics to obesity, says coauthor Charles Bailey, an assistant professor at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. Many scientists are now concerned that exposure to antibiotics -- from medication, food or even tap water -- has the potential to kill off some of the beneficial bacteria that may protect people from chronic diseases, Bailey says.

1ST EBOLA DIAGNOSIS IN THE U.S.: IS IT TIME TO START PANICKING?

DR.. JUAN RIVERA - MIAMI, FLORIDA

INTERVIEW: 3:00

For the first time, a patient in an American hospital has been diagnosed with Ebola. The unidentified man, who is being treated at a Dallas hospital, didn't show symptoms until after four or five days of arriving in the United States from Liberia. Citing privacy concerns, officials are being tight-lipped about how he contracted the virus or how he's being treated. Shortly after the news broke Tuesday evening, more than 50,000 tweets about Ebola flew through Twitter in a one-hour period, many of them panicked responses. Should we be concerned? The short answer: no. Now let's get to the long answer. Could the patient's fellow passengers be infected? The patient being treated in a Dallas hospital flew from one of the Ebola hot zones -- Liberia -- to Texas. But his fellow passengers aren't thought to be at risk because you can only contract Ebola through direct contact with the bodily fluids of someone who's actively sick with it. It's not like a cold or the flu, which can be spread before symptoms show up. And it doesn't spread through the air. "It's very unlikely that (Ebola victims) would be able to spread the disease to fellow passengers," said Stephen Monroe of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. What's to stop other Ebola patients getting on a flight and coming here? The CDC has issued warnings to avoid nonessential travel to Liberia, Sierra Leone and Guinea, the countries grappling most with the outbreak. And it's also working with airport officials in those nations, and in Nigeria, so that every person getting on a plane is screened for fever. "And if they have a fever, they are pulled out of the line, assessed for Ebola and don't fly unless Ebola is ruled out," said CDC Director Dr. Thomas Frieden.

U.S. GOVERNMENT TO HELP PAY MIGRANT KIDS' LEGAL BILLS

The Department of Health and Human Services announced that the agency plans to devote $9 million over the next two years to pay for legal representation of about 2,600 unaccompanied minors. Some of the tens of thousands of undocumented children who illegally crossed into the United States while fleeing violence in Central America. will get legal help from an unexpected source: the federal government. The Department of Health and Human Services announced Tuesday that the agency plans to spend $9 million over the next two years to pay for legal representation for about 2,600 unaccompanied minors. The money will help support programs that provide legal services to children caught crossing the border illegally and who are applying for asylum or other forms of protection deportation back to their home countries. Applicants will be eligible for the money on a first-come, first-served basis. Phoenix is one of nine cities chosen for the program. The others are Los Angeles; Houston; Miami; Baltimore; Arlington, Va.; Dallas; Memphis, Tenn.; and New Orleans, said Kenneth Wolfe, a spokesman for the Department of Health and Human Services.

HEALTH OFFICIALS WATCHING FOR ANY MORE EBOLA CASES
PEDRO ROJAS LIVE - DALLAS, TEXAS
PKG: 2:52

A Dallas emergency room sent a man with Ebola home last week, even though he told a nurse that he had been in disease-ravaged West Africa, and officials at the hospital are considering if they would have acted differently had the entire medical staff been aware. The decision by Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital to release the patient, who had recently arrived from Liberia, could have put others at risk of exposure to Ebola before the man went back to the ER a couple of days later when his condition worsened. A nine-member team of federal health officials was tracking anyone who had close contact with the man after he fell ill on Sept. 24. The group of 12 to 18 people included three members of the ambulance crew that took him to the hospital, as well as a handful of schoolchildren. They will be checked every day for 21 days, the disease's incubation period. "That's how we're going to break the chain of transmission, and that's where our focus has to be," Dr. Tom Frieden, director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, told The Associated Press Wednesday. The CDC reminded health care providers to ask patients with symptoms if they've traveled recently. The American College of Emergency Physicians planned to alert its members as well. The patient explained to a nurse last Thursday that he was visiting the U.S. from Africa, but that information was not widely shared, said Dr. Mark Lester, who works for the hospital's parent company.

OBAMA APPROVES PLAN TO LET CHILDREN IN CENTRAL AMERICA APPLY FOR REFUGEE STATUS
IMMIGRATION ATTORNEY EZEQUIEL HERNANDEZ
INTERVIEW: 4:00

President Obama has approved a plan to allow several thousand young children from Central American countries to apply for refugee status in the United States, providing a legal path for some of them to join family members already living in America, White House officials said Tuesday. The program is aimed at helping to discourage many children from making a long, dangerous trek across Mexico in an attempt to cross into the United States and join their parents. The idea was first presented to Mr. Obama at the height of the summer's border crisis, when tens of thousands of young children from El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras were pouring across the border from Mexico and presenting themselves to American border patrol agents as refugees fleeing from rape and gang violence. The spike in migrations raised concerns that the journey across Mexico was often more dangerous than the rough conditions the children were fleeing in their home countries, while the images of border control Officials have said that the number of children crossing the border has decreased over the last two months, but White House officials said the new program should help to stem that flow even further by providing children a way to determine if they qualify as refugees without leaving their country. In June, more than 10,000 children crossed the border into the United States, according to figures from the Department of Homeland Security, but in August, that number had dropped to slightly more than 3,000 children.

DALLAS HOUSEHOLD WEARY OF EBOLA QUARANTINE
MARIA EUGENIA PAYAN - MIAMI, FLORIDA
PKG: 1:10

A woman who has been confined to her Dallas apartment under armed guard after a man infected with Ebola stayed at her home, said she never imagined this could happen to her so far from disease-ravaged West Africa. Louise Troh said Thursday that she is tired of being locked up and wants federal health authorities to decontaminate her home. Authorities say the circle of people in the U.S. possibly exposed to Ebola widened after the man, who arrived from Liberia last month, was discharged from a hospital without being tested for the deadly virus. The confinement order, which also bans visitors, was imposed after the family failed to comply with a request to stay home, according to Dallas County Judge Clay Jenkins. Texas State Health Commissioner David Lakey said the order would ensure Troh, her 13-year-old son and two nephews can be closely monitored for signs of the disease. The first Ebola diagnosis in the nation has raised concerns about whether the disease that has killed 3,300 people in West Africa could spread in the U.S. Federal health officials say they are confident they can keep it in check. Troh said she had imagined she would be safe from the grasp of the virus thousands of miles from her native Liberia, the worst-hit country.

BARACK OBAMA: ACTION ON IMMIGRATION NOT IF, BUT WHEN
VO/SOT: 49

With frustration mounting, President Barack Obama sought Thursday to quell doubts he'll use his presidential powers to act on immigration, telling Hispanics and immigration activists it's "not a question of if but when." At the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute's annual gala, Obama warned activists that his eventual actions will spark intense political opposition that could threaten the durability of what he does. In a partisan pitch a month before Election Day, he urged Hispanics across the U.S. to use their votes to improve prospects in the future for a legislative fix. "The moment I act -- and it will be taking place between the November election and the end of the year -- opponents of reform will roll out the same old scare tactics," Obama said. "When opponents are out there saying who knows what, I'm going to need you to have my back." Once hailed as a champion for Hispanic rights, Obama's relationship with the Hispanic community has become strained since he decided last month to abandon his earlier pledge to act quickly after summer's end to help some immigrants who are in the U.S. illegally. Instead, he said he'd wait until after the Nov. 4 elections, exasperating immigration activists who accused the president of putting politics ahead of their families and said they had waited far too long already.

The biggest of Friday's recalls covers just over 430,000 Cadillac SRX and Saab 9-4X SUVs, mainly in North America. The company says some rear suspension nuts may not have been tightened properly. That could cause the toe link adjuster to separate from the suspension, possibly causing a crash. The recall affects SRXs from the 2011 through 2015 model years and Saabs from the 2011 and 2012 model years. GM says the problem has caused three crashes and two injuries. Dealers will inspect the SUVs and install a new assembly if needed. Unsold SRXs are being checked to make sure the nuts are tightened properly. The other recall covers nearly 94,000 Chevrolet Spark mini-cars from 2013 through 2015 in the U.S. and Canada. A Texas meat company has issued a recall for about 90-thousand pounds of ground beef -- after customers reported finding pieces of metal. This is file video of ground beef similar to that under recall. Most of the beef was sold at h-e-b grocery stores, as store-brand "ground beef" or "ground chuck". All of the beef in the recall has the number 3-3-7 stamped in the u-s-d-a inspection mark. Authorities say at least four consumers complained, with one person reporting a chipped tooth. The beef was shipped by sam kane beef processors of corpus christi.

BARACK OBAMA: MORE CAREFUL EBOLA SCREENING CONSIDERED

VO: 29

President Barack Obama says the government is considering ordering more careful screening of airline passengers arriving from Ebola-plagued West Africa. Obama says, "we don't have a lot of margin for error." The president hasn't outlined the details, but he says the U.S. will be "working on protocols to do additional passenger screening both at the source and here in the United States." A North Carolina drugmaker is Providing its experimental antiviral drug to the Liberian man being treated for Ebola in Dallas. Officials at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital say Thomas Eric Duncan is in critical condition and being treated with the oral medicine developed by Chimerix Inc. Another drug, called ZMapp, was exhausted after being used on a few patients, and a third drug called TKM-Ebola, is also said to be in limited supply.

US HEALTH PROVIDERS EXPAND THEIR EBOLA PRECAUTIONS

PEDRO ULTRERAS - DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 2:05

Public hospitals in New York City are concerned enough about Ebola that they've secretly been sending actors with mock symptoms into emergency rooms to test how good the triage staff is at identifying and isolating possible cases. A small hospital in the Ohio countryside has hung up signs, imploring patients to let nurses know immediately if they have traveled recently to West Africa. And across the U.S., one of the nation's largest ambulance companies has put together step-by-step instructions on how to wrap the interior of a rig with plastic sheeting while transporting a patient. Ebola has yet to infect a single person on U.S. soil -- the one confirmed case here involves a man who contracted the virus overseas. But health care providers are worried enough that they are taking a wide variety of precautions. It isn't yet clear whether those preparations are overkill, or not nearly enough. But medical officials and health experts say that, at the very least, the scare is giving them a chance to reinforce and test infection control procedures. "The attention has been, in a sad way, very helpful," said Dr. Richard Wenzel, an epidemiologist at Virginia Commonwealth University and a former president of the International Society for Infectious Diseases.

SUPREME COURT-GAY MARRIAGE

VO: 27

The Supreme Court unexpectedly cleared the way Monday for a dramatic expansion of gay marriage in the United States and may have signaled that it's only a matter of time before same-sex couples can marry in all 50 states. Rejecting appeals from five states seeking to preserve their bans, the Supreme Court effectively made such marriages legal in 30 states, up from 19 and the District of Columbia, taking in every region of the country. Challenges are pending in the other 20 states. Almost immediately, exuberant couples began receiving marriage licenses previously denied to them. "This is the dream day," said Sharon Baldwin, a plaintiff in a challenge to Oklahoma's ban, as she and her partner got their license in the Tulsa County Clerk's Office. Directly affected by Monday's orders were Wisconsin, Indiana, Oklahoma, Utah and Virginia. Officials in those states had appealed lower court rulings in an effort to preserve their bans. Couples in six other states -- Colorado, Kansas, North Carolina, South Carolina, West Virginia and Wyoming -- should be able to get married in short order since those states would be bound by the same appellate rulings that have been on hold. While county clerks in a number of states quickly began issuing licenses to gay and lesbian couples, in some other states affected by the court's action officials did not sound ready to give up the fight. However, their legal options are limited.

SUPREME COURT CLEARS THE WAY FOR GAY MARRIAGE EXPANSION
TONY LIMA - EXECUTIVE PRODUCER, SAVE DADE
INTERVIEW 4:00

Gay and lesbian couples are getting legally married in the South for the first time, crossing a threshold into a conservative region that long stood united against same-sex marriage. The U.S. Supreme Court's decision Monday to turn away appeals from a handful of states including Virginia means marriage bans are unconstitutional throughout the 4th U.S. Circuit. And that means similar bans in West Virginia and North and South Carolina should fall as soon as judges in each state follow through on the appellate court's orders. Carol Schall and Mary Townley of Chesterfield County challenged Virginia's ban, wanting their California marriage to be recognized in the state where they are raising a 16-year-old daughter. Their victory shows that a region once considered inhospitable to gays has changed, Shall said. "It says the South is a wonderful, welcoming and open place," she said. But as with other civil rights battles, plenty of southern conservatives seem determined to fight to the bitter end.

EBOLA CRISIS LEAVES DALLAS A CITY ON EDGE
VO: 45

Leaders are urging calm, but Dallas is a city on edge as it approaches the first Ebola incubation deadline this week. Several residents of the neighborhood where the first U.S.-diagnosed case of Ebola was found told city officials they'd been sent home from work. Some community volunteers shunned a nearby after-school program, and the hospital at the epicenter of fear acknowledged for the first time that some patients were staying away. Health officials tried to present a unified front of both preparedness and reassurance. Ten of the 48 people being monitored are confirmed to have had close contact with Thomas Eric Duncan, who is hospitalized in critical but stable condition. Federal health officials say people with the virus can begin showing symptoms of Ebola eight to 10 days after exposure.

AMERICANS LIVING LONGER AS MOST DEATH RATES FALL
VO: 27

Americans are living longer than ever before. A new government report says not only has U.S. life expectancy inched up, but death rates have fallen. For example, the life expectancy for a child born in 2012 is 78 years and 9 1/2 months. That's about six weeks longer than life expectancy in 2010 and 2011, and it's a record. For men 65 years old, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says they have about 18 years of life left, and women have about 20 1/2 years.

FIRST CASE OF ENTEROVIRUS-D68 CONFIRMED IN FLORIDA

VO: 2

A 10-year-old Tampa area girl is recovering from the Enterovirus, it's the first confirmed case of the disease in the state of Florida, according to the Florida Department of Health. The girl is recovering in Polk County. Enteroviruses are transmitted through close contact with an infected person, or by touching objects or surfaces contaminated with the virus and then touching the mouth, nose or eyes. "The most effective way to prevent enteroviruses is to practice good hygiene regularly by washing hands often," said Deputy Secretary for Health and Deputy State Health Officer for Children's Medical Services, Dr. Celeste Philip. "Those having cold-like or flu-like symptoms should stay home from child care centers, school or work and, if possible, remain apart from other family members." Enterovirus D68 can cause mild to severe respiratory illness and can attack the nervous system in severe cases. There's no vaccine or specific treatment, and symptoms include fever, runny nose, sneezing, cough, and body and muscle aches. Some children have more serious illness with breathing difficulty and wheezing, especially children with a history of asthma. More than 500 cases have been reported in 43 states. Four people with the virus have died, although it's unclear what role the germ played.

EBOLA SUSPECT & CALIFORNIA POSSIBLE CASE

VO: 35

A sheriff's deputy who went into the apartment where deceased Dallas Ebola patient Thomas Eric Duncan stayed was taken to hospital on Wednesday after feeling ill. The deputy was taken to an urgent care clinic in Frisco, a northern suburb of Dallas, and was exhibiting enough symptoms of Ebola to trigger a preliminary screening, Frisco Fire Chief Mark Piland said. He did not specify the symptoms and said test results were expected back within about 48 hours. "This patient had reported that they initially had been in the apartment, in the initial Ebola patient's in Dallas, and had some contact with family members," Piland said. An Inglewood hospital announced Wednesday that a "possible Ebola patient" had been admitted to its emergency room after traveling from Liberia to LAX, but the county's public health chief said the patient was not suspected of having the potentially deadly virus. The individual was brought to Centinela Hospital Medical Center by ambulance from Los Angeles International Airport on Tuesday night, the hospital stated. "The patient does not have any symptoms of Ebola, however, due to travel history, appropriate precautions were implemented," the hospital's statement read. The unidentified person, who was referred to in the statement's headline as a "possible Ebola patient," has been fully isolated in the emergency room and all appropriate testing will be conducted, the hospital said.

EBOLA FEVER SCREENING AT 5 US AIRPORTS

MARIA EUGENIA PAYAN - MIAMI, FLORIDA

PKG: 2:49

Five major U.S. airports will soon begin an extra level of screening to try to catch any travelers from Ebola-ravaged countries who may be carrying the disease. About 150 travelers a day will have their temperatures checked using no-touch thermometers, and Health officials expect false alarms from fevers due to malaria. The extra screening probably wouldn't have found Thomas Eric Duncan when he arrived from Liberia last month without symptoms. Duncan, the first person to be diagnosed with Ebola in the U.S., died Wednesday in Dallas. The new airport screening will begin Saturday at New York's JFK International Airport and then expand to Washington Dulles and the international airports in Atlanta, Chicago and Newark, New Jersey. The disease has killed at least 3,800 people in West Africa.

A-t-and-t is accused of keeping a percentage of the fees-- as well as obscuring the charges on bills, and preventing customers from securing full refunds.

SENIORS IN 49 STATES CAN'T AFFORD RETIREMENT

VO: 34

Seniors in almost every state in the country don't have the income to retire comfortably. 20-13 census bureau data shows households 65 and older are living on just over 37-thousand dollars a year, in 49 states. That's well short of the pre-retirement income that's recommended for retirees -- closer to 45-thousand dollars per year. Nevada and washington d-c are the only districts where seniors have incomes above the savings benchmark. Analysts say retirement savings should allow a senior to live on 70 percent of the average income of working adults, age 45 to 65.

ENTEROVIRUS AND EBOLA FEARS

DR. JUAN RIVERA

INTERVIEW 4:00

Two young Tennessee children - one in East Tennessee and one in West Tennessee - had enterovirus D-68, the national Centers for Disease Control and Prevention confirmed Wednesday. Both children were hospitalized with the respiratory illness, which has been sweeping the nation, but are now home and "doing well," said Tennessee Department of Health officials. The two are the first lab-confirmed cases of enterovirus D in the state, which until Wednesday was one of only four states in the continental U.S. to have no confirmed cases. A 10-year-old Tampa area girl is recovering from the Enterovirus, it's the first confirmed case of the disease in the state of Florida, according to the Florida Department of Health. GAY WEDDINGS IN NEVADA

VO 34 SEC.

Synopsis:

Gay couples have started to get married in Las Vegas, a city filled with chapels that for them had been off-limits until Thursday evening. Thomas Topovski cried as the Clark County clerk announced to cheers that gay marriage licenses would be issued, bringing same-sex unions to the marriage capital of the world amid a flurry of court decisions this week that tore down legal barriers nationwide. About 10 same-sex couples were waiting as the announcement came shortly after 5 p.m. For gay couples in Nevada, the licenses ended long-felt frustration that increased by the day as they watched legal wrangling go in favor of others elsewhere, while they could do nothing but wait. A Supreme Court decision Monday that denied appeals from five states seeking to retain their bans on same-sex unions effectively made gay marriage legal in about 30 states. Opponents have continued to push back against gay marriage, saying such unions are unconstitutional. Days of weddings, court decisions and confusion have followed the high court ruling. West Virginia officials began issuing gay marriage licenses Thursday, prompting further frustration in Nevada.

VOTER ID LAWS IN TEXAS AND WISCONSIN

VO: 30 SEC.

Synopsis:

The Supreme Court on Thursday evening stopped officials in Wisconsin from requiring voters there to provide photo identification before casting their ballots in the coming election. Three of the court's more conservative members dissented, saying they would have allowed officials to require identification. Around the same time, a federal trial court in Texas struck down that state's ID law, saying it put a disproportionate burden on minority voters. The Wisconsin requirement, one of the strictest in the nation, is part of a state law enacted in 2011 but mostly blocked by various courts in the interim. A federal trial judge had blocked it, saying it would "deter or prevent a substantial number of the 300,000-plus registered voters who lack ID from voting" and would disproportionately affect black and Hispanic voters. The law was provisionally reinstated last month by a unanimous three-judge panel of the federal appeals court in Chicago hours after it heard arguments. The full court was deadlocked, five to five, on a request for a new hearing.

OBAMA ON IMMIGRATION

VO: 30 SEC.

Synopsis:

President Obama said Thursday that Republicans would be committing political suicide if they continued to hold up an immigration overhaul effort in Congress, leading the next generation of young people to reject the party for years to come. If they look at the GOP's immigration policies, a whole generation of Americans will determine "that party does not seem to care about me and my life," Obama said at a meeting in Santa Monica with young entrepreneurs. Although the immigration legislation that stalled in the House is all but dead for the year, Obama said he still had hope for its passage. House Republicans will see the political peril ahead, he predicted. Obama made the remarks at an event that sought to reach out to so-called millennials, the generation of Americans born roughly between 1980 and 2000. The stop was part of Obama's campaign season effort to promote his economic agenda to the Democratic base, particularly young people, women, African Americans and Latinos.

EBOLA FEARS INCREASE

PEDRO ROJAS - DALLAS, TEXAS

PKG: 1:39

A breach of infection control resulting in a Dallas health worker getting Ebola raises fresh questions about whether hospitals truly can safely take care of people with the deadly virus, as health officials insist is possible. Even in the United States, with the best conditions and protective gear available, mistakes can happen that expose more people to Ebola, the new case reveals. On Sunday, the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention confirmed infection in the health worker, who was said to have worn full personal protection equipment while caring for Thomas Eric Duncan, a Liberian man who died Wednesday of Ebola at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital. She doesn't know how she became infected, and officials are investigating to try to find out. Of the six Ebola patients treated in the U.S. before the health worker's case, Duncan was the only one not treated at one of the specialized units in several hospitals around the country set up to deal with high-risk germs. The CDC's director, Dr. Thomas Frieden, has said that any U.S. hospital with isolation capabilities can care for an Ebola patient. But his stance seemed to soften on Sunday, when asked at a news conference whether officials now would consider moving Ebola patients to specialized units.

If the test is accurate, andrew spencer reports it would mark the first ever transmission of the deadly virus in the united states. More than four-thousand people have died in the ebola outbreak, and the world health organization says at least one in every twenty has been a health care worker. The ebola virus is now believed to have spread -- for the first time in the united states -- to a nurse at texas health presbyterian hospital. She had helped treat thomas eric duncan, the liberian man who died at the dallas hospital, last week. The case is similar to one at a hospital in spain, where a nurse's assistant became the first person to contract ebola outside africa.

RETIREMENT SAVINGS: WOMEN OUTSAVE MEN

Women are generally better at putting money away for retirement... But they still have less in their 401-k than men. Hat's according to research by vanguard, an investment management company. According to the survey, women are 10-percent more likely to enroll in their workplace savings plan than men --and save a bigger chunk of their paychecks. But the women surveyed had an average savings account balance of 78-thousand dollars, far below the male average balance of 121-thousand dollars. Blame it on the wage gap. Overall, men in the survey earned an average of 40-percent more than women. Another factor: Women, on average, work 12 years less than men do over the course of their careers - because they are more likely to take time off for family.

DOCTOR GIVES BLOOD FOR EBOLA-INFECTED DALLAS NURSE

PEDRO ROJAS - DALLAS, TEXAS

LIVER: 2:30

A Dallas nurse who caught Ebola while treating a Liberian patient who died of the disease has received a plasma transfusion donated by a doctor who beat the virus. Ebola has killed more than 4,000 people in an outbreak the World Health Organization calls "the most severe, acute health emergency seen in modern times." Federal health officials say they are ramping up training for medical workers who deal with the infected. Medical records indicate nurse Nina Pham was among about 70 hospital workers who cared for Thomas Eric Duncan.

Pham is the first person infected with Ebola in the U.S. Family members and a mission group say Kent Brantly, a doctor who survived Ebola, has donated blood for a transfusion that could save the 26-year-old nurse. Duncan died on Wednesday.

LIQUID NICOTINE EXPOSURES UP SHARPLY AMONG KIDS

VO: 35

Poison control workers say that as the e-cigarette industry has boomed, the number of children exposed to the liquid nicotine that gives hand-held vaporizing gadgets their kick also has spiked. More than 2,700 people have called poison control this year to report an exposure to liquid nicotine, over half of those cases in children younger than 6, according to national statistics. The number shows a sharp rise from only a few hundred total cases just three years ago. The battery-powered electronic vaporizers often resemble traditional cigarettes and work by heating liquid nicotine into an inhalable mist. The drug comes in brightly colored refill packages and an array of candy flavors that can make it attractive to young children, heightening the exposure risk and highlighting the need for users to keep it away from youngsters. "With kids, the exposure we're seeing is usually parents or family members leave out refill bottles that they try and open," said Ashley Webb, director of the Kentucky Regional Poison Control Center.

OFFICIAL: 2ND WORKER IN ISOLATION WITH 90 MINUTES

MARIA EUGENIA PAYAN - MIAMI, FLORIDA

PKG: 2:42

A second health care worker at a Dallas hospital who provided care for the first Ebola patient diagnosed in the U.S. has tested positive for the disease, the Texas Department of State Health Services said Wednesday. The worker at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital was monitoring herself for symptoms of Ebola, Dallas County Judge Clay Jenkins said. The unidentified woman reported a fever Tuesday. She was in isolation within 90 minutes, Jenkins said. Health officials said the worker was among those who took care of Thomas Eric Duncan, who was diagnosed with Ebola after coming to the U.S. from Liberia. Duncan died Oct. 8. The department said a preliminary Ebola test was conducted late Tuesday at a state public health laboratory in Austin, Texas, and came back positive during the night. Confirmatory testing was being conducted at the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. Officials said the health care worker was interviewed to quickly identify any contacts or potential exposures. It said others who had interactions with the worker or possible exposure to the virus will be monitored.

Only about a third of those polled say the u-s is doing all it reasonably can to try to prevent more cases of ebola. And most respondents, 91-percent, want stricter screening of those entering the u-s from african countries plagued by the ebola outbreak. The post reports that a little more than a thousand people were surveyed with a 3.5 percent margin of error.

US PANEL TO HEAR APPEAL ON NY STOP AND FRISK CASE

VO: 28

The city's police unions are arguing they should be able to continue to appeal a federal judge's ruling that the New York Police Department's stop and frisk policy violated civil rights. Lawyers for the unions were scheduled to appear before a panel of judges Wednesday at the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. A judge has already ruled the unions did not signal soon enough a wish to be included in the lawsuit. The stop and frisk case was heard last year in federal court. U.S. District Court Judge Shira Scheindlin ruled after a 10-week civil trial that the NYPD's stop, question and frisk policy sometimes discriminated against minorities. She ordered sweeping reforms to the policy, and installed a monitor to oversee the changes. The Bloomberg administration appealed the decision, but the de Blasio administration dropped the appeal when the new mayor came into office this year. The police unions are trying to take over the appeal.

NATIONAL SURVEY OF NURSES SHOWS HEIGHTENED EBOLA CONCERNS

GIANNINA SANTOS - NURSE

INTERVIEW: 4:00

Three out of four nurses say their hospital hasn't provided sufficient education for them on Ebola, according to a survey by the largest professional association of registered nurses in the United States. National Nurses United has been conducting an online survey of health care workers across the U.S. as the Ebola outbreak has widened globally. After a Texas nurse who cared for the first patient diagnosed with the Ebola in the U.S. tested positive for the virus Sunday, the group released its latest survey findings.

Out of more than 1,900 nurses in 46 states and Washington D.C. who responded, 76 percent said their hospital still hadn't communicated to them an official policy on admitting potential patients with Ebola. And a whopping 85 percent said their hospital hadn't provided educational training sessions on Ebola in which nurses could interact and ask questions.

DALLAS NURSES CITE SLOPPY CONDITIONS IN EBOLA CARE

PEDRO ROJAS - DALLAS TEXAS

LIVER: 2:30

Liberian Ebola patient was left in an open area of a Dallas emergency room for hours, and the nurses treating him worked for days without proper protective gear and faced constantly changing protocols, according to a statement released late Tuesday by the largest U.S. nurses' union. Nurses were forced to use medical tape to secure openings in their flimsy garments, worried that their necks and heads were exposed as they cared for a patient with explosive diarrhea and projectile vomiting, said Deborah Burger of National Nurses United. Burger convened a conference call with reporters to relay what she said were concerns of nurses at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital, where Thomas Eric Duncan -- the first person to be diagnosed with Ebola in the U.S. -- died last week. RoseAnn DeMoro, executive director of Nurses United, said the statement came from "several" and "a few" nurses, but she refused repeated inquiries to state how many. She said the organization had vetted the claims, and that the nurses cited were in a position to know what had occurred at the hospital. She refused to elaborate. Among the nurses' allegations was that the Ebola patient's lab samples were allowed to travel through the hospital's pneumatic tubes, opening the possibility of contaminating the specimen delivery system. The nurses also alleged that hazardous waste was allowed to pile up to the ceiling.

Unfortunately, many halloween treats contain these very ingredients. That's why the food and allergy research and education organization wants to take the potentially deadly "tricks" out of trick or treating. Their teal pumpkin project encourages people to put a painted pumpkin outside their door if they are offering non-food treats for kids with allergies. The group suggests small toys, stickers and crayons as an option. The idea is getting a huge online response. The group's first facebook post reached 2.7 million people in 72 hours.

US STEPS UP DOMESTIC RESPONSE TO EBOLA CRISIS

PEDRO ROJAS - DALLAS TEXAS

LIVER/PKG: 2:36

The federal government is ramping up its response to the Ebola crisis after a second Dallas nurse became ill and it was disclosed that she had been cleared to fly a day before her diagnosis. While Ebola patients are not considered contagious until they have symptoms and only two persons have been known to contract the disease in the U.S., the revelations Wednesday raised new alarms about whether hospitals and the public health system are equipped to handle the deadly disease. Federal health officials were being called to testify before a congressional committee Thursday to explain where things went wrong. President Barack Obama directed his administration to respond in a "much more aggressive way" to oversee the Dallas cases and ensure the lessons learned there are transmitted to hospitals and clinics across the country. For the second day in a row he canceled out-of-town trips to stay in Washington and monitor the Ebola response.

EBOLA CONTACTS MAY BE ADDED TO "NO FLY" LIST

When you think the t-s-a's no-fly list, you might think suspected terrorists. Soon, potential carriers of the ebola virus might be on that list as well. The c-d-c is considering new measures after another airline passenger tested positive for ebola. Flying out of dallas on a specially-equipped jet, the woman who tested positive for ebola, this week, landed in atlanta wearing a protective suit -- covered head to toe as she was loaded onto an ambulance to be taken to the c-d-c. It was a very different experience from her flight earlier this week. Amber vinson took a commercial flight from ohio to texas on monday, a day before being tested for ebola -- a test which came back positive.

NEW US EBOLA CASE A NURSE WHO TREATED MAN IN TEXAS PEDRO ROJAS - DALLAS TEXAS

LIVER: 2:30

A dated yearbook picture of a smiling young woman has become the latest face of Ebola in the U.S. The high school picture of Amber Vinson spread across the country after the 29-year-old nurse was confirmed with the virus Wednesday. But little was publicly revealed about her, beyond the image of her with a wide grin, tipped head and shiny pink blouse. Vinson lived in Akron, Ohio, and went to Kent State University, where she received degrees in 2006 and 2008, the university said. She was licensed as a registered nurse in Ohio on February 2, 2009, and remains licensed there, records show, though she has since moved to Dallas. She became an R.N. in Texas on August 22, 2012. Vinson lived in an unpretentious rental in The Village, a sprawling series of apartment buildings popular with young professionals and other Dallas newcomers. It's been the home to countless other workers at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital, which is just 2 miles away, including other people on the team that cared for Thomas Eric Duncan, the Ebola patient who died Oct. 8.

EXISTING PROTOCOLS MIGHT NOT BE ENOUGH FOR EBOLA DRA. AILEEN MARTY -

INTERVIEW: 4:00

As Thomas Eric Duncan's health deteriorated, nurses Amber Joy Vinson and Nina Pham were at the Ebola patient's side. They wore protective gear including face shields, hazardous materials suits and protective footwear as they inserted catheters, drew blood and dealt with his body fluids. Still, the two somehow contracted Ebola from the dying man. As health officials try to figure out how that happened, the nurses' cases have brought new scrutiny to national Ebola protocols that had never before been put to the test at a general hospital. Authorities are examining whether those guidelines need to be rewritten. "Our infectious disease department was contacted to ask, what is our protocol," Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital nurse Briana Aguirre said on NBC's "Today" show. "And their answer was, we don't know. We're going to have to call you back." Aguirre, who did not deal directly with Duncan but helped take care of Pham, said the protective gear they were provided left the neck exposed.

Past studies estimate seniors lose nearly three billion dollars to financial abuse every year. It's impossible to tell how many are victimized -- because many victims stay silent.

VIOLENT MEDIA CAUSES CHILDHOOD AGGRESSION?

VO: 30

A new study is taking a look at a controversial topic -- how parents and doctors view the effects of violent media on children. So what do the results reveal? The study, authored by Brad Bushman, a professor of communication and psychology at Ohio State University, found a consensus among some researchers, parents, and pediatricians -- they believe violent media can increase aggression in children. 90-percent of pediatricians surveyed, as well as at least 66-percent of both researchers and parents strongly agree violent games can increase aggressive behavior among kids. But violent literature? According to the study, not so much. Less than half of the people surveyed believe violent comics and books have the same harmful effects.

EBOLA FEAR, MONITORING EASES FOR SOME IN DALLAS
MARIA EUGENIA PAYAN - MIAMI, FLORIDA
PKG: 2:23

Ebola fears began to ease for some Monday as a monitoring period passed for those who had close contact with a victim of the disease and after a cruise ship scare ended with the boat returning to port and a lab worker on board testing negative for the virus. Federal officials meanwhile ramped up readiness to deal with future cases. A top government official said revised guidance instructs health workers treating Ebola patients to wear protective gear "with no skin showing." The Pentagon said it is forming a team to support civilian medical staff in the U.S. In Dallas, Louise Troh and several friends and family members will finally be free Monday to leave a stranger's home where they have been confined under armed guard for 21 days -- the maximum incubation period for Ebola. They had close contact with Thomas Eric Duncan, a Liberian man who died of the disease at Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital on Oct. 8. "I want to breathe, I want to really grieve, I want privacy with my family," Troh told The Associated Press. The incubation period also has passed for about a dozen health workers who encountered Duncan when he went to the Dallas hospital for the first time, on Sept. 25.

CLINICS RECOMMEND HOSPITALS FOR EBOLA TESTING
VO: 28

When a Dallas County sheriff's deputy who had entered the apartment of the first patient to die from Ebola in the U.S. started feeling ill himself, he didn't rush to the nearest hospital. He chose an urgent care clinic. So did a man who recently traveled to West Africa and was complaining of flu-like symptoms, prompting the suburban Boston urgent care practice where he went to briefly shut down last week. The deadly virus' arrival in the U.S. has put the spotlight on weak spots in American hospitals, but those facilities are not the only ones who have suddenly found themselves on the front lines against Ebola. Urgent-care clinics for many people have become de-facto emergency rooms. They are not, however, equipped like hospitals to treat serious illnesses, such as Ebola, nor do they have isolation units. Clinics are urging potential patients to get checked for the highly contagious virus at a hospital. Given the problems at the Texas hospital, where Thomas Eric Duncan died and two nurses have been diagnosed with the virus, an Ebola case could have posed even greater problems at a clinic or smaller hospital, experts say.

SURVEY DATA BREACH

VO: 20

A new survey suggests almost half of shoppers surveyed, will avoid retailers affected by last year's data breaches when it comes time for this year's holiday shopping. The report, just released by creditcards-dot-com indicates that 45-percent of americans surveyed said they would "definitely not" or "probably not" shop at some of the retailers recently affected by major data breaches during the upcoming holiday season. This includes stores like target, home depot, and neiman marcus among others, where hackers illegally accessed customer credit and debit card information earlier this year. That figure includes 29-percent of those surveyed who said they likely wouldn't shop at those retailers even if they used to be frequent shoppers at the store.

EBOLA CDC GEAR GUIDELINES

VO: 32

Federal health officials on Monday issued new guidelines to promote head-to-toe protection for health workers treating Ebola patients. Officials have been scrambling to come up with new advice for protective gear since two Dallas nurses became infected while caring for the first person diagnosed with the virus in the United States. The new guidelines set a firmer standard, calling for full-body garb and hoods that protect worker's necks; setting rigorous rules for removal of equipment and disinfection of gloved hands; and calling for a "site manager" to supervise the putting on and taking off of equipment. They also say health workers who may be involved in an Ebola patient's care should repeatedly practice and demonstrate proficiency in donning and removing gear -- before ever being allowed near a patient. And they ask hospitals to establish designated areas for putting on and taking off equipment, whether it's a room adjacent to an Ebola patient's room or a hallway area cordoned off with a plastic sheet.

GOVERNMENT SEEKS SUPPLIES FOR IMMIGRATION DOCUMENTS

VO: 31

The Homeland Security Department appears to be readying itself for an increase in the number of immigrants living illegally in the country to seek work permits once President Barack Obama announces his executive action plans to change immigration rules. A draft contract proposal the government published earlier this month shows that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services wants to buy card stock to make as many as 34 million Permanent Resident Cards, or Green Cards, and work permits in the next five years. Administration officials won't say what Obama will do on immigration. But it's widely believed he will announce plans later this year to temporarily protect millions of immigrants living in the country illegally from deportation and give them new work permits.

SUGAR-SWEETENED DRINKS MAY AGE YOU FASTER

VO: 32

Too much soda can create a higher risk for diabetes, heart disease and stroke. Now add to the list: Four and a half years of extra aging. Scientists at the university of california, san francisco have identified a link between daily soda consumption and shorter telomeres. Telomeres are parts of the cell that are essential to division and naturally shrink with age, but too much sugar in your diet can speed up the process. According to this study, one in five americans drinks one 20 ounce soda every day. Sugary drinks may do more than just rot your teeth according to a new study.

EBOLA NURSE FREE OF VIRUS

VO: 25

Doctors no longer detect Ebola in a Texas nurse who flew to Ohio and back before she was diagnosed with the virus, her family said Wednesday. Officials at Emory University Hospital and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention couldn't detect Ebola in Amber Vinson as of Tuesday evening, her family said in a statement released through a media consultant. Doctors usually do two tests a day apart before saying they can't detect the virus. It's unclear how many tests Vinson has had. Vinson's mother, Debra Berry, spoke to her Wednesday, and Vinson has been approved for transfer from isolation, the statement said. "We all know that further treatment will be necessary as Amber continues to regain strength, but these latest developments have truly answered prayers and bring our family one step closer to reuniting with her at home," Berry said. Vinson, 29, remains in treatment at Emory, near Atlanta. Emory wouldn't release any information about the patient, hospital spokeswoman Holly Korschun said.

OBAMACARE HISPANICS

VO: 27

HealthCare.gov's new EZ application for coverage can't be used by legal immigrants or naturalized U.S. citizens. That's prompting concern that many Hispanics and Asians will go right back into long enrollment queues this year. The Obama administration wants more Latinos to sign up under the health care law for 2015. Hispanics are the nation's largest minority group, and they're younger and more likely to be uninsured. An administration official says there have been significant improvements in the application process for immigrants, but advocates are unimpressed. Alvaro Huerta a lawyer with the National Immigration Law Center in Los Angeles, says the whole idea was that HealthCare.gov was going to be seamless and easy, but that doesn't seem to be the case for immigrants.

READY OR NOT, OPEN ENROLLMENT TIME

VO: 30

It is probably something you don't pay much attention to but this year you probably want to. There could be changes in open enrollment in your company's health care plan for 2015 that you may need to check out. Usually the only time we pay attention to open enrollment is because of a big life change, like getting married or having a kid, for example, but this year we all need to pay close attention. The reason? It has to do with changes related to the affordable care act or "obamacare", meaning health plans must now meet a new standard. According to the 2014 aflac work forces report -- there are a couple of things you better check before letting your open enrollment deadline pass by: 56 percent of companies surveyed raised co-payments and premiums last year and more companies are expected to do that by the end of 2014. A mercer study says companies are going to do more to encourage steps to improve your own health, like wellness campaigns or company-sponsored health screenings.

STUDY: BEER FERTILITY

VO: 20

Would-be daddies should hit the bottle immediately. Beer-guzzling guys can increase their chances of becoming a father if they drink a few beers each day, a new study shows. But while the booze helped men get their gals pregnant, downing a few cups of coffee each day cut the guys' chances of making a baby, according to the study done by Massachusetts General Hospital. The study examined more than 100 men at the hospital whose partners were undergoing in vitro fertilization between 2007 and 2013, according to London's Telegraph. Dudes who downed at least a pint and a half each day were more than twice as likely to have children through IVF than those who stayed stone-cold sober. Java drinkers, however, showed the opposite effect. Men who drank more than two cups of joe each morning had their chances of becoming fathers cut drastically to just 1 in 5.

40% OF WEB USERS HAVE BEEN HARASSED

VO: 20

New research gives a detailed look at abusive behavior on the web. 73-percent of adult internet users have witnessed someone be harassed online--and 40-percent have personally experienced it. That's according to a new survey by the pew research center. The group used responses from more than 28-hundred web users. The survey found young adults, ages 18-to-29, are more likely than any other group to experience online harassment. And the harshest forms of abuse--physical threats, stalking and sexual harassment--are often reserved for women. The pew report suggests social media is where a lot of online harassment takes place.

U-S NATIONAL PARK FEE HIKES PROPOSED

VO: 20

If you're planning on visiting the grand canyon or yellowstone national park, next year, you better pack some extra cash. Some national parks are planning on hiking their entrance fees. For the first time in eight years the national park service will be allowed to raise entrance and amenity fees. Proposals have to be submitted by next march; the fee increases could go into effect by next summer. Yosemite national park released its proposal on tuesday. A weekly pass could increase from 20 to 30 dollars. Camping fees could go up 20-percent. Less than a third of the national park service's 401 sites charge an entrance fee.

AFTER 1ST EBOLA CASE IN NYC, 3 OTHERS QUARANTINED

ENNY PICHARDO - NEW YORK

PKG: 1:28

Doctor who became New York City's first Ebola patient was praised for getting treatment immediately upon showing symptoms, and health officials stressed that the nation's most populous city need not fear his wide-ranging travel in the days before his illness began. Mayor Bill de Blasio and Gov. Andrew Cuomo urged residents not to be alarmed by the doctor's diagnosis Thursday, even as they described him riding the subway, taking a cab and bowling since returning to New York from Guinea a week ago. De Blasio said all city officials followed "clear and strong" protocols in their handling and treatment of him. "We want to state at the outset that New Yorkers have no reason to be alarmed," de Blasio said. "New Yorkers who have not been exposed are not at all at risk." The doctor, Craig Spencer, a member of Doctors Without Borders, reported Thursday morning coming down with a 100.3-degree fever and diarrhea. He was being treated in an isolation ward at Manhattan's Bellevue Hospital, a designated Ebola center. In appearance on CNN on Friday morning, the governor said Spencer "presented himself" to the hospital when he had a 100-point-3 fever ... not 103 ... as has been reported." New York City's health department on Friday confirmed that the doctor's temperature was 100.3. Cuomo said Friday that the doctor "obviously felt he wasn't symptomatic" when he went out "in a limited way." "When you're a doctor you know you're not contagious until you're symptomatic," Cuomo said on NBC's Today show. "As soon as he had a fever he presented himself to a hospital." The governor, in an appearance on CNN's New Day, said there was no reason to fear riding the subway, and he would do so Friday. One commuter said he first learned of New York's first Ebola case on the subway on his way to work Friday morning. It's "a scary thing" because there are "a lot of germs in New York," said Chris Thompson who was riding the L train, one of the lines Spencer rode after returning home from West Africa.

GOVERNOR: EBOLA DOC SOUGHT HELP WITH LOWER FEVER
ENNY PICHARDO - NEW YORK
LIVER: 2:30

Gov. Andrew Cuomo says the New York doctor who has tested positive for Ebola sought help with a 100.3-degree fever, not a higher temperature. In appearance on CNN, the governor said Spencer "presented himself" to the hospital when he had a 100-point-3 fever ... not 103 ... as has been reported." He repeated the comment on another morning program. Cuomo says Dr. Craig Spencer acted responsibly, even though he rode the subway, bowled and rode a cab. The governor said the doctor obviously felt he wasn't symptomatic" when he went out "in a limited way." Spencer recently returned to the city after treating Ebola patients in West Africa. As a doctor, Cuomo said Spencer knew you're not contagious until you're symptomatic. Spencer tested positive for the virus on Thursday. He is the first case in the city.

GOVERNORS BACK HOME QUARANTINE FOR EBOLA WORKERS
VO: 33

The governors of New York and New Jersey are at odds with scientists over Ebola as they back 21-day quarantines for medical workers returning from West Africa, while the nation's top infectious-disease expert warns that such restrictions are unnecessary and could discourage volunteers from aiding disease-ravaged countries. The two governors late Sunday night emphasized separately that their policies permit home confinement for medical workers who have had contact with Ebola patients if the workers show no symptoms. They will receive twice-daily monitoring from health officials. The emphasis on home confinement was at odds with the widely criticized treatment of a nurse returning from Sierra Leone who was forcibly quarantined in a New Jersey hospital isolation unit even though she said had no symptoms and tested negative for Ebola.

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said such quarantines in medical facilities would only be used in some cases, such as if the health care workers were from states other than New York or New Jersey. For workers under home confinement, family members will be allowed to stay, and friends may visit with the approval of health officials.

GAS-PRICES DROPS 18 CENTS

VO: 28

A national survey of gas prices reports that the average cost of U.S. regular grade gas dropped 18 cents per gallon in the last two weeks. Industry analyst Trilby Lundberg said Sunday that the average for regular grade gas is $3.08 per gallon, while midgrade averages $3.31 and premium $3.47. Retail diesel averages $3.67. Lundberg said the price has dropped 65 cents since its peak in May and is 29 cents below what it was last year. She said the drop has been driven by a decrease in the price of crude oil. She forecasts minimal further cuts if prices remain stable. In the Lower 48 states, San Francisco had the highest average price at $3.45 per gallon, while Memphis, Tennessee, had the lowest average at $2.73.

In the tense standoff between a Maine nurse and state officials, it was a surreal scene. Nurse Kaci Hickox, who recently returned to the United States after treating Ebola patients in Sierra Leone, went on a bike ride with her boyfriend Thursday -- followed by a police cruiser and a throng of journalists watching their every move. Her lawyer called the ride "a good way to exercise her right." Hickox told reporters she "just wanted to enjoy this beautiful day." Hours later, Gov. Paul LePage said negotiations with Hickox over where she could go had failed, adding that he would "exercise the full extent of his authority allowable by law" to keep her away from public places.

LAVA CLOSES IN ON PAHOA HOMES

he Hawaii National Guard deployed 83 troops to Pahoia as the lava flow crawled toward Pahoia Village Road on Thursday. Darryl Oliveira, Hawaii County Civil Defense director, said the troops were deployed to provide security and assist with a roadblock and additional safety issues.

The flow continues to threaten isolation for the small, rural town of about 950 residents. The lava emerged from a vent in Kilauea in June and began a slow trek northeast toward the ocean. People in the small town lying in its path say the lava will reshape the community yard by yard as it slides toward the ocean.

Under a lot of pressure to start "black Friday" early, some retailers are now making news just by saying no. Game-Stop and Nordstrom announce they will not be open for business on Thanksgiving. The trend toward early Black Friday sales reached a fever pitch last year, with Kmart opening at 6 a-m on Thanksgiving. Both Macy's and Walmart started their Thanksgiving sales at 6 p-m.

=====VIDA SANA CON CECILIA: ¿SE PUEDE PREVENIR EL ÉBOLA? (TRT 1:58)

LLEGÓ EL MOMENTO DE VIDA SANA CON CECILIA!! Y ELLA ME ACOMPAÑA ESTA TARDE PARA HABLAR DE ALGO QUE TODOS TENEMOS EN LA MENTE: EL ÉBOLA!! CECILIA, ¿EL MORTAL VIRUS SE PUEDE PREVENIR?

HOLA! QUE BUENO ESTAR AQUÍ DE NUEVO Y SÍ, ESA ES LA GRAN PREGUNTA, PORQUE AUNQUE NO EXISTE UNA VACUNA, SÍ PODEMOS TOMAR MEDIDAS PARA PREVENIR LA INFECCIÓN EN ESTE LADO DEL MUNDO, Y AYUDARNOS A ESTAR FUERTES PARA LUCHAR NO SOLO CONTRA EL ÉBOLA, SINO TAMBIÉN CONTRA CUALQUIER OTRO VIRUS

COMO SIEMPRE, LAS MUJERES EMBARAZADAS O LACTANDO DEBEN CONSULTAR CON SU DOCTOR ANTES DE TOMAR HIERBAS ANTIVIRALES Y TODO, ANTES DE HACER CAMBIOS DE ESTILO DE VIDA...

LO MÁS IMPORTANTE ES NO ALARMARNOS EXAGERADAMENTE, ESTÁ COMPROBADO QUE UN CUERPO CON EL SISTEMA INMUNOLÓGICO FUERTE Y BIEN NUTRIDO, PUEDE RESISTIR MEJOR EL EMBATE DE CUALQUIER ENFERMEDAD... AUNQUE CLARO ESTÁ, SI LA CARGA DE VIRUS ES INMENSA LAS COSAS CAMBIAN, PERO AUN NO ESTAMOS EXPUESTOS COMO LO QUE ESTÁ PASANDO EN LOS PAISES AFECTADOS EN ÁFRICA.

=====STUDY-SPEND LESS ON WEDDING, LONGER MARRIAGES (VO TRT :24)
