Topic: If the Thai king issues a decree in Germany he may be deported

The King of Thailand Vajiralongkorn has lived in Germany in recent years, and the German parliamentarians are worried that the King of Thailand will run the country far away in Germany. The German Bundestag warned on Sunday (22nd) that if King Tai issues a decree in Germany, he may be deported. The King of Thailand enjoyed diplomatic immunity during his stay in Germany, and Congress stated that he still has the right to deport him. However, according to the assessment of the Bundestag Academic Service Agency, the German government is almost unable to sue the king. Even if the king is on vacation in Germany, his identity still represents Thailand, and it is difficult for law enforcement agencies to regard him as an "unwelcome person" and deport him. German Foreign Minister Maas warned last month that Thailand's anti-government demonstrations continued, and the King of Thailand would not be able to issue orders in Germany, stating that the German side had made it clear that policies affecting Thailand could not be issued on German territory.

Trump wished Giuliani a speedy recovery. Giuliani appeared on Fox News earlier on Sunday, telling Trump's legal challenge for the general election in many states. Giuliani attended the State Assembly hearing in Michigan last Wednesday. He confessed about election fraud and did not wear a mask.
