Topic: Former U.S. gymnastics team doctor involved in sexual assault attacked in jail

Nassar, the former USA Gymnastics team doctor who is serving a sentence for sexual assault, was attacked by another inmate in a Florida prison facility on Sunday (9th) and suffered multiple stab wounds to his neck, back and chest. He is currently in stable condition. The Federal Bureau of Prisons confirmed that an inmate at Coleman Federal Prison was attacked and injured on Sunday afternoon, but authorities declined to disclose the identity of the injured inmate, citing privacy and safety concerns. The authorities stated that prison staff had taken immediate measures to protect the lives of prisoners, and the injured prisoner had been sent to local hospital for further treatment. They also stated that the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) had been informed of the incident, and an internal investigation was underway. There were no other staff or prisoners involved in the incident. Injured Nassar, 59, had sexually assaulted more than 100 female athletes, including multiple Olympic gymnastics gold medalists, in the name of treatment during his more than 20 years as a sports medicine doctor for USA Gymnastics and Michigan State University in 2017 and 2018. He was sentenced to 60 years and 175 years in prison respectively.

Topic: Hong Kong-style dessert shop chain in Toronto apologizes for hiring refusal to new Hong Kong immigrants at its branches

A Hong Kong-style dessert shop chain in Toronto, Canada, recently issued a job advertisement in simplified Chinese with the words "New immigrants from Hong Kong Stream B or summer jobs. Please do not disturb. Thank you." This caused dissatisfaction among local Hong Kong residents. The dessert shop later issued two apology statements, emphasizing that it was the behavior of individual branches. The incident involved was a branch of "Tangji Dessert" in the North York District of Toronto. The brand's website claimed that it was "a young comprehensive Hong Kong-style dessert brand founded in 2010." After the recruitment advertisement was widely circulated among local Hong Kong people, the dessert shop apologized on its social network page stating that "It will never tolerate any remarks and behaviors that hurt or discriminate against Hong Kong people. This time it was due to negligence in brand management. There was no Review advertising content, so we have an unshakable responsibility." After the investigation, severe sanctions were imposed on the employees of the branch involved, and the relevant recruitment advertisements were immediately removed. The dessert shop issued an apology statement stating that it had immediately fired the manager of the branch involved.

Topic: 16-year-old girl stabbed to death by her friend's supervisor over McDonald's sweet & sour sauce

A physical fight broke out over the sweet & sour sauce at a D.C. area McDonald's where a 16-year-old girl went with her friends on Sunday, August 27. The girl was stabbed to death by her friend with a knife. The suspect fled after the attack, but was eventually arrested. He is currently being held in a juvenile care center and will appear in court on Friday (September 1). Naima Ligon, from Waldorf, Maryland, drove to Washington, D.C., for a party with a group of five friends last Saturday (26th). After the party, everyone was so lingering that they decided to go to a McDonald's in northwest Washington, D.C., to buy something to eat in the early hours of Sunday morning. CCTV footage released in court showed Ligon and another girl attacking the suspect of the same age outside the fast food restaurant in order to snatch sweet & sour sauce. The suspect did not fight back at the time, but when the group was about to get in the car and leave, the suspect suddenly pounced on Ligon, took out a 20-centimeter knife and stabbed her in the chest and abdomen.

Topic: Air Canada kicked off passenger from plane after refusal to be sit on a vomit filled seat

Flight AC1706 of Air Canada was accused of leaving vomit on the seats. Passengers who complained about the situation were later kicked off the plane, sparking controversy. US media reported on Tuesday (5th) that Air Canada later issued an apology statement. The flight involved flew from Las Vegas, USA to Montreal, Canada, on the 26th of last month. Passenger Susan Benson, who witnessed the entire incident, said she noticed the smell of vomit when she boarded the plane and found it difficult for two female passengers to sit in their seats. Air Canada tried to quickly clean up the plane before boarding, but failed to clean it thoroughly. It even claimed that because the flight was full, passengers had to stay on the vomit-covered seats. Air Canada later responded that it was reviewing the serious issue internally, admitted that it did not follow operating procedures correctly at the time, and had directly contacted the relevant passengers. A Delta spokesman said the team worked to thoroughly clean the aircraft and fly passengers to their final destinations as quickly and safely as possible, and apologized for the delay and any inconvenience it caused to customers' travel plans.

Topic: Family of driver, who fell and died from collapsed bridge while using the map instructions, sues Google

In September 2022, Philip Paxson, from North Carolina, followed Google Maps instructions and drove his car onto a bridge that had collapsed many years in the city of Hickory, fell into the stream and died. His family filed a lawsuit in civil court on Tuesday (19th) against Google, claiming that Google failed to update the map and caused Paxson's death. Family and lawyer representing the deceased said that on September 30, 2022, Paxson relied on Google Maps for driving direction on an unfamiliar road after an event. However, that Google Maps direction was outdated and thus caused Paxson's death. The filing states that after the bridge collapsed in 2013, local residents contacted Google several times to request updated maps. American media reported that the barricades at the entrance to the collapsed bridge disappeared due to vandalism. The family of the deceased also sued three other local companies, claiming that they were responsible for repairing the bridge. A Google spokesperson expressed condolences to Paxson's family and said their goal is to make maps provide accurate route information and that they are studying the allegations.
