Ronald Wayne White, a Navy veteran in De Soto, Dallas, Texas, died in a rented apartment for three years without anyone's notice until now. According to New York Post, White's corpse was discovered on the kitchen floor last week when staff of the apartment building did inspection in rooms that had not been using water. Detective Pete Schulte said that when the attending police entered the apartment, it was obvious that White had been dead for a long time. Police revealed that White, 51, paid rent automatically through a bank account. When he died, all the windows in the apartment were sealed, and there were some diabetes drugs with a prescribing date in 2016. Police does not suspect foul play on White's death. White's mother, Doris Stevens, said that she was very worried when she could not reach her son on White's birthday in April 2017, but she did not know that her son had lived in the new apartment, and there was no clue of his whereabouts in the old residence. Stevens pointed out that the police refused to investigate White's disappearance at the time because "he's an adult with a travel plan."
