

TEXARKANA, Texas — Texarkana's Cinemark movie theater will reopen in a week with the Russell Crowe thriller "Unhinged" on tap as the movie choice.

Cinemark had previously intended to reopen the local cinema in early July but scrapped those plans as the company rescheduled a phased reopening.

On Friday, Aug. 21, local moviegoers can return to the movie theater to see Russell Crowe as a villainous stranger who begins stalking a woman after a road rage incident. Showtimes for movies further down the calendar have yet to be announced.

At a time when the novel coronavirus pandemic has shuttered movie theaters and other entertainment venues across the country, Cinemark has established a cleanliness and safety protocol to ensure the health of guests and employees.

"Our multi-phased reopening plan was thoughtfully designed with multiple contingencies in place that enable us to efficiently adapt to today's ever-changing environment. We continue to pay close attention to status of the virus, local mandates and availability of new content while prioritizing the health and safety of our guests, employees and communities," said Cinemark CEO Mark Zoradi when the Plano, Texas-based company announced its reopening plan changes.
