After seven years of debate, the Obama administration rejected the proposed Keystone XL pipeline. Obama said the project, which would extend from Canada to Texas, served "no national interest." The New York Times' Coral Davenport explains what's behind the decision. Also on Friday, the October jobs report was released showing over 270,000 jobs added and an unemployment rate down to 5% for the first time since 2008. Eamon Javers of CNBC explains how the good report may encourage the Federal Reserve to raise interest rates. In the 2016 presidential race, Ben Carson is facing increased scrutiny for claims made in his 1992 memoir. Carson and businessman Donald Trump now lead the field of Republican candidates while one-time frontrunner Jeb Bush makes a push to reboot his campaign. The Washington Post's Dan Balz and CNN's Jeff Zeleny break down the events on the election trail this week.

Republicans Debate the Economy, Paul Ryan Elected House Speaker & Obama Authorizes Boots on Ground in Syria: Republican presidential candidates debated economic issues in their third matchup of the 2016 election. Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio sparred over Rubio's missed Senate votes. Jeb Bush's performance seems to have worried some of his donors and Jeanne Cummings of The Wall Street Journal says that Bush must improve for the next debate or his campaign doesn't stand a chance in the upcoming election. The debate also took another turn with candidates and even audience members expressing irritation at the CNBC moderators for questions that were viewed as contentious. RNC Chair Reince Priebus, upset with the outcome of the debate, has chosen to suspend the GOP's partnership with NBC for their upcoming debate. John Harwood of CNBC, who moderated the latest debate, says the "anger at the debate is akin to the anger in the House" among Republicans. In Congress, Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, despite his initial hesitation, was elected the 54th Speaker of the House this week. Ryan called for unity and renewal within the GOP party, the week that outgoing Speaker John Boehner helped pass a bipartisan budget deal. Robert Costa of The Washington Post reports on the experience Ryan brings to the job. President Obama announced this week that circumstances have changed and has authorized Special Forces to Syria to assist rebel fighters battling ISIS. Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times says that Obama's decision to enter Syria may be an indirect response to Russia's recent occupation within the country.

In Tampa, Florida, in February 2013, a giant hole opened up under the bedroom floor of Jeffrey Bush, swallowing the 36-year-old as he slept. His body was never found. Bush was a victim of a sinkhole — a growing worldwide hazard that lurks wherever limestone and other water-soluble rocks underpin the soil. When carbon dioxide in the air dissolves in rainwater, it forms a weak acid that attacks the soft rocks, riddling them with holes like Swiss cheese. Sinkholes can occur gradually when the surface subsides into bowl-shaped depressions or suddenly, when the ground gives way — often catastrophically. Sinkholes have swallowed highways, apartment buildings, horses, camels, even golfers, with monster-size holes cracking the earth from Siberia to Louisiana. With compelling eyewitness video of dramatic collapses, and following scientists as they explore the underlying forces behind these natural disasters, NOVA travels the globe to investigate what it's like to have your world vanish beneath your feet.

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Hillary Clinton faced another congressional committee this week concerning the 2012 Benghazi attacks that killed four Americans. Despite the 11 hour hearing and sometimes pointed exchanges between committee members, Josh Gerstein of Politico says that while the hearing was a setback her email scandal isn't over with a looming FBI investigation coming to the forefront. Vice President Joe Biden announced he will not run for president. His announcement came this week amongst a flurry of speculation about his White House aspirations. Biden cited that despite his family's support he did not believe that there would be enough time to make a viable bid. The Wall Street Journal's Carol Lee says that if Biden had chosen to run he would become the "standard bearer of Obama's legacy." Rep. Paul Ryan announced that he will pursue the House Speaker candidacy. Ryan nailed down key endorsements from conservative groups of leading congressman like the House Freedom Caucus. CNN's Manu Raju explains how despite his constant assertions of not wanting the job Ryan relented by setting forth a string of conditions, one of them being Ryan's desire to see more unity within the GOP. Republicans Debate the Economy, Paul Ryan Elected House Speaker & Obama Authorizes Boots on Ground in Syria: Republican presidential candidates debated economic issues in their third matchup of the 2016 election. Jeb Bush and Marco Rubio sparred over Rubio's missed Senate votes. Jeb Bush's performance seems to have worried some of his donors and Jeanne Cummings of The Wall Street Journal says that Bush must improve for the next debate or his campaign doesn't stand a chance in the upcoming election. The debate also took another turn with candidates and even audience members expressing irritation at the CNBC moderators for questions that were viewed as contentious. RNC Chair Reince Priebus, upset with the outcome of the debate, has chosen to suspend the GOP's partnership with NBC for their upcoming debate. John Harwood of CNBC, who moderated the latest debate, says the "anger at the debate is akin to the anger in the House" among Republicans. In Congress, Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, despite his initial hesitation, was elected the 54th Speaker of the House this week. Ryan called for unity and renewal within the GOP party, the week that outgoing Speaker John Boehner helped pass a bipartisan budget deal. Robert Costa of The Washington Post reports on the experience Ryan brings to the job. President Obama announced this week that circumstances have changed and has authorized Special Forces to Syria to assist rebel fighters battling ISIS. Doyle McManus of The Los Angeles Times says that Obama's decision to enter Syria may be an indirect response to Russia's recent occupation within the country.

Oregon Shooting Renews Push For Gun Laws, Republican House Leadership Shakeup and Russian Airstrikes in Syria: After a gunman opened fire at a community college in Oregon killing nine people, President Obama made an impassioned appeal for stronger gun control policy. Despite Obama's plea, Alexis Simendinger of Real Clear Politics says there seems to be no appetite to bring up new gun legislation on Capitol Hill and if any change occurs it'll be a project for the next president. After the announced resignation of House Speaker John Boehner, Republicans on Capitol Hill are preparing to elect a new leader. The likely next-Speaker Kevin McCarthy has come under fire from Democrats after he initially told Fox News that the investigation into the Benghazi attacks and Hillary Clinton's role was politically motivated. Another government shutdown was avoided after a battle over federal funding for Planned Parenthood heated up. NPR's Susan Davis discusses how the debate will start up again in December. And after meeting with President Obama at the UN General Assembly in New York this week, Russian President Vladimir Putin and his government launched airstrikes in Syria just days later. Despite the assertions of the Kremlin, it appears the attacks are being carried out against anti-Assad forces in the region and not against ISIS. The New York Times' Peter Baker and The Daily Beast's Nancy Youssef discuss how Putin's defense of Assad's government may be an inadvertent defense of his own.

Chaos erupted in the House Republican conference this week after Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy decided to end his bid to replace outgoing Speaker John Boehner. The vote was postponed at the GOP looked for a candidate who could garner support from the establishment and the Party's right flank. Party leaders openly courted Wisconsin Rep. Paul Ryan, who has said multiple times he doesn't want the job. Morning Consult's Reid Wilson reports on the scramble in the House. Plus, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton announced her opposition to the Pacific trade agreement pushed by her former boss President Obama. The Washington Post's Anne Gearan reports on Clinton's efforts to distance herself from Obama. And Politico's Michael Crowley reports on the Pentagon's decision to end a program that trained Syrian rebels to fight ISIS. The $500 million dollar program trained only a handful of recruits. At the same time, Russia is amplifying its presence in Syria. Meanwhile, the Supreme Court returns for the new term with cases on issues ranging from affirmative action to voting rights. Joan Biskupic of Reuters discusses whether the more liberal wins of the SCOTUS' last session were an irregularity or a pattern set to stick around.
