Musical Healing #303

Friday, July 7, 2017

Music is part of our celebrations and our inspiration. It can serve as a means of commonality between humans. It can also heal. Today we speak with Pamela Florea, a psychotherapist who integrates sound into the modalities she offers her clients in order to help them break cycles of physical, emotional, and spiritual suffering. We also have a conversation with Maine singer/songwriter Daniel Connor, who has returned to his music as a way of returning to health after having surgery for a brain tumor in 2012.

Daniel Connor

(<http://themainemag.com/radio/radio-guests/daniel-connor/>)

Daniel Connor has been an integral part of Maine's music community over the last two decades. Prior to focusing on his solo career, Daniel was the singer and songwriter for the band Gypsy Tailwind. After the heartbreaking and difficult breakup of Gypsy Tailwind, Daniel was soon back to writing and recording songs with the intent on releasing a solo album. Then without warning, Daniel's life and plans forever changed. In June 2012 he suffered a severe seizure. Later that day he was diagnosed with an extremely rare brain tumor called oligodendroglioma. After a year of recovery Daniel was again able to drive a car and took a job as a taxi driver and realized it was a great way to exercise memory, hold conversations, and improve focus and concentration skills, while also earning enough money to cover basic expenses. During this period Daniel became inspired and began playing his instruments, songwriting, and recording again.

Entrepreneurship & Education #304

Friday, July 14, 2017

Sometimes it takes a willingness to engage in conflict—and work our way through difficult situations—in order to succeed. Today we discuss this idea with executive and entrepreneur Jean Hoffman, and we also speak with the superintendent of Portland public schools, Xavier Botana. Both Hoffman and Botana were recently featured in Maine magazine's 50 Mainers (<http://themainemag.com/people/50-mainers-leading-example/>) issue for their contributions to our state.

Xavier Botana

(<http://themainemag.com/radio/radio-guests/xavier-botana/>)

Xavier Botana has been superintendent of the Portland Public Schools since July 1, 2016. The Portland Board of Public Education selected him after conducting a nationwide search that drew more than 40 applicants. In choosing Botana, the board valued his credentials and his work as an innovative school leader in such key areas as parent engagement, budget development, and curriculum alignment. In his seven months leading the Portland Public Schools, Botana has spearheaded a successful update of the district's Comprehensive Plan; worked with school and city officials, families and the community to draft a transformative proposal for critical renovations at four elementary schools; and aided in the process of developing a new family partnership policy for the district. Botana, 53, was born in Cuba during the Castro regime. His family's experience immigrating to the United States from Cuba motivated his work in education.

Friday, July 28, 2017

Summer chapels offer Maine residents and visitors of all denominations a unique setting in which to worship. Today we speak with the Reverend Kit Sherrill, who for many years served as the summer rector of the chapel of All Saints-by-the-Sea in Southport (<http://allsaintssouthport.org>).
