Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: Each year in the United States of America we set aside several holidays to celebrate freedom, and reflect, remember, and recognize the sacrifices of veterans, active-duty members, and their families. Memorial Day, Independence Day, Veteran’s Day. Today we’re going to discuss the significance of each of these days by flipping through the pages of history with historian David Barton then we’ll talk with veteran Ben Peterson, about his first-hand experiences on the ground and how we can best support those who have given so much to protect the freedoms that we enjoy each day.

What is the Great Reset with Erick Stakelbeck: Welcome to the Great Reset. What would you say if I told you that by the year 2030, you'll own nothing, have no privacy, and be happy, that you'll live in a cashless society where all currency is digital, that everyone on earth will require a digital ID to travel freely, that maintaining a decent job, using the bank of your choice, or running a thriving business will depend upon your approach to climate change? The end game is a one world government all supposedly in the name of diversity, equity, inclusion, and the environment. Today, some very powerful global players, led by the World Economic Forum and with the enthusiastic backing of western leaders, major corporations, and the U.N., are promoting this radical transformation of society. They call it the great reset, which would see power wielded by an elite few that would dictate to the rest of us. So what would this great reset mean for Christians? What role does the United States play? How far along is the plan and does the Bible have anything to say about it? Over the next hour I'll be joined by a group of experts who studied this disturbing movement in depth. They say it's all too real and that it's not a conspiracy theory if the people behind it are saying out loud what they intend to do. Imagine a world with no paper money or coinage where all currency is digital, and transactions can be made with the wave of a hand. That's the vision of the great reset. It all sounds very convenient, but what happens if you oppose the policies of the powers that be, whether on say climate change, human sexuality, or abortion? In a world of digital currency, could your ability to buy and sell be cut off if you don't fall in line? From Pharaoh to Rome, from Napoleon to Hitler. Many empires have tried to impose their will on the world, but none of them had the advanced technology that we have today. With everything from the internet to A.I. it's technology that in many cases is used for good but can easily be misused by those who have an obsession with control. For supporters of the great reset, China serves as a model. The communist regime in Beijing has imposed a surveillance state where every move is tracked. Every citizen is given a social credit score based on their loyalty to the regime and its agenda. Reggie Littlejohn is an expert on China's one child policy of forced abortions. She's seen the tyranny of China's government up close and she's sounding the alarm that it could come here courtesy of the great reset. Amid all the sweeping changes that the World Economic Forum and other proponents of the great reset have put forward, one name is never mentioned God. How should Christians view this great reset, and does it seek to place man above the Almighty? A one world government and uniting mankind under one all-powerful regime is an idea that's as old as time itself. The Bible tells the story of the tower of Babel of Nimrod and his attempts to subjugate the world under his rule and build a tower that would reach to heaven. God had other plans. Yet that still hasn't stopped a long line of tyrants throughout history from driving towards the same goal. Could the great reset be laying the groundwork for a future tyranny where technology enables a group of global elites to wield the kind of power and control that tyrants of the past could only dream of? The Bible says the one final leader will arise to rule the world. At least for a short time until God directly intervenes, just as He did in the time of Nimrod. Because while earthly kingdoms come and go, God still sits on the throne. The architects of the great reset would be wise to remember that and as followers of Jesus that fact should give us encouragement and the strength to face whatever the future may bring. Guests include Marc Morano, Author & Founder of ClimateDepot.com, The Kwak Brothers: Daniel Kwak and Sam Kwak, Authors & Entrepreneurs, Victor Davis Hanson, Senior Fellow at Hoover Institution, Reggie Littlejohn, Founder & President of Women's Rights Without Frontiers, and Jack Hibbs, Senior Pastor of Calvary Chapel Chino Hills.

CBN Reporter Wendy Griffith Reports: Inflation is easing due to lower food and gas prices and that's giving some much-needed relief to consumers, but it looks like the Fed is still on track to raise interest rates at least once more. March numbers show the rate of inflation slowing, dropping from a whopping 6 percent from this time last year to 5 percent this year. It's the ninth consecutive month it's fallen, but inflation is still way above normal. Grocery prices fell for the first time in two-and-a-half years, down three-tenths of a percent from February to March. Beef, milk, fruits, vegetables, and eggs all came down a bit. Gas prices also fell 4.6%. E.J. Antoni, an economist with the Heritage Foundation told CBN's Faith Nation that's a good sign. However, Antoni says people's paychecks are still not going as far because incomes aren't going up as fast as inflation – and partly due to higher borrowing costs. Still, prices in the service industry continue to rise. Businesses and consumers are doing the best they can to cope. The Fed is expected to continue raising interest rates to bring inflation down, but that's also hurting consumers and so the FED may take a pause after another hike next month.

CBN Reporter Matt Galka Reports: With Tax Day around the corner, the fear of an audit looms for some Americans. A recent report by Stanford University shows that some Americans are being targeted for audits more than others. Stanford report showed black taxpayers might have more to stress about come tax time. The report found the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) audits black taxpayers about three to five times more than non-black taxpayers. Financial advisor Camari Ellis says part of the problem could be about tax refunds. The study found a big disparity with the earned income tax credit, a rule that typically helps low to moderate-income families. Ellis believes some tax preparers might be trying to take advantage by promising big returns, and then audit could be triggered. Senators grilled new IRS Commissioner Daniel Werfel about the apparent racial bias at the agency during his confirmation hearing in February. Government agencies typically use algorithms to drive decisions like audits. User experience researcher Kamaya Jones, who crunches numbers with her firm Theory Research + Insights, says that even though data may be blind to race, the circumstances surrounding the numbers the IRS is using are not. The new IRS commissioner pledged to the U.S. senators that he'd get back to them in 60 days about the discrimination and how the IRS will correct it.

CBN Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: The U.S. dollar has been the world's reserve currency since the Bretton Woods agreement in 1944, yet some economists believe the dollar's reign could be in jeopardy. If the dollar falls from its "throne," you will feel it in your pocketbook. There's been plenty of talk lately that the U.S. dollar could lose its reserve currency status. A growing number of nations are turning away from the greenback as a payment currency. But that is a separate issue from whether the dollar will lose its reserve currency status. If the dollar were dethroned as the world's reserve currency, some have warned that we would see "soaring inflation" and a catastrophic drop in the American standard of living. Other economists, however, believe the effect would not be nearly that dramatic. Experts not only fail to agree on whether the dollar is doomed to lose its reserve currency status, they also differ on what the economic fallout would be. Pete Earle at the American Institute of Economic Research is one of many economists who say there is no short-term threat to the dollar's reserve currency status because there just aren't better options. He also believes there is no reason to be worried that the dollar will be replaced by the Chinese Yuan. The reason? China won't do what it takes to become a reserve currency. It won't allow the yuan's value to float. It pegs the yuan to the dollar. And its capital markets are largely closed to investors. The US has the deepest capital markets in the world. Talk of a "Brics" currency, bringing together Brazil, Russia, India, China, and South Africa, is still just talk. America's share of the reserve currency market has fallen mostly because of the creation of the Euro. If the Dollar were replaced as the world's reserve currency, your money would be worth less, foreign goods would cost more, inflation would increase, and the US government would have to rein in its runaway spending because fewer nations would be buying US treasuries and financing our huge federal debt. Nations currently ditching the dollar as a payment currency is a more pressing issue. Some nations are dropping the dollar to simply "cut out the middleman." They want to use their own currency when trading. Others are afraid of a "weaponized" dollar after the US froze hundreds of billions of dollars in Russian reserves because of its invasion of Ukraine. Others have a political objective: they want to see America's economic dominance weakened. This is a potential near-term threat to the dollar's value. But economists say any threat to the dollar's reserve currency status is many years, if not decades away.

CBN Reporter Caitlin Burke Reports: Disruptions in key supply chains throughout the pandemic exposed a serious vulnerability: One of America's greatest adversaries basically controls the needs of key U.S. industries. The elements needed for some of the most commonly used technologies in the world today are relatively abundant in the earth's crust, including here in the United States, but when it comes to the global supply chain, it's almost entirely controlled by China. As the relationship between Beijing and Washington seems to crumble, demand for tech that relies on rare earth elements is only building. Relying on the country seen as the greatest threat to both U.S. prosperity and national security is an obvious problem, and experts believe the solution is even more obvious. In 2017, the owners of MP Materials bought an abandoned mine in the Mojave Desert. Their goal: use it to create a complete magnetic supply chain. In less than a decade, they've almost accomplished it with the Mountain Pass Mine, now the largest rare earth mine in the United States. Matt Sloustcher, Senior Vice President of Communications and Policy at MP Materials, says the company is moving full steam ahead on the final steps of this supply chain. The project has the support of both the public and private sectors. Back in 2021, General Motors agreed to buy the magnets produced for use in their electric vehicles. The Department of Defense is also interested, investing $10 million in 2020, and another $35 million in 2022. Creating this kind of supply chain here has bipartisan support. Frank Fannon, CEO of Fannon Global Advisors and former Assistant Secretary of State for Energy Resources, says the Trump administration also backed the project. Fannon sees China essentially operating as a cartel when it comes to its control over the rare earth industry. Case in point, recently moving toward banning exports. These materials will also play a significant role in the U.S. clean energy transition, with demand expected to triple over the next decade. Fannon says both the federal government and the corporate sector must stop undermining U.S. strength and security by continuing to turn to China for cheap, clean energy goods. Fannon says it's imperative the U.S. fully commit now to building the clean, secure, and resilient supply chains needed in the future, a future that must not rely on China.

Every year, more than a quarter of a million children come into foster care in this country. As a result of the nation's opioid epidemic, this number is growing faster than the system can accommodate. More and more often, there simply aren't enough families to meet the need, and these children must wait in a residential setting for a family to become available. Child welfare advocates are calling us all to learn more about how to help these children in need. Join us for this episode of Taking Care of Business and learn more about how foster care is a way of providing a family life for children who cannot live with their own parents, granting them a family life and a chance at stability that they desperately need.

Tonight on Praise: The Saturday morning social media post that shocked the nation. Former President Donald Trump wrote on his truth social account on March 18th "The far and away leading Republican candidate and former president of the United States of America will be arrested. Mr. Trump's social media post had immediate impact; around the clock coverage in media ensues. All eyes turned to Trump's home in Mar-a-Lago, Trump Tower in New York, and the Manhattan District Attorney Office. On April 3rd, Trump and the Secret Service motorcade head to the airport to fly to New York, the city with tall buildings that bear his name, to face criminal charges. The next day, in a Manhattan courtroom, for the first time in U.S. history, a former president surrendered to law enforcement and was placed under arrest. The former president denies all wrongdoing in connection to the case. Is this justice? Is this political persecution? Or could it be something much deeper than that? There is a spiritual battle underway in our nation. As we head toward the elections next year, is there room for Judeo-Christian values to be represented through the candidates running for office? Our nation is in desperate need for a return to biblical values. There was another mass shooting Monday at a bank in Louisville, Kentucky. The shooter was employed at the bank. One bank manager described him as extremely intelligent. On March 27, 2023, a mass shooting occurred at the Covenant School, a private Christian school in Nashville. The shooter, a former student, had planned out the massacre well in advance. How do we address the violence breaking out? Is gun reform the answer? And what about the mental health crisis in our nation? Meanwhile major corporations are embracing the woke agenda. The popular kids toy company Build a Bear has come out with a new drag queen bear. Brands like Bud Light and Nike have recently featured transgender influencers in their marketing. Where is America headed spiritually? There is a battle for the soul of our nation and the time to stand up for faith values is now. What pivotal role do we as Christians play in this season? As Christians how do we discern the times? Join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz now as they discuss the pressing matters of our day from a Christian worldview.

Tonight on Praise: Matt Crouch is joined by O.S. Hawkins, Bestselling Author and Pastor, and Ilan Sobel, CEO of Bioharvest Sciences, one of the most advanced biotech companies in the world. In Israel they are developing breakthrough technology to leverage the power of the plants for the overall health and wellness of people. Their latest product, VINIA Red Grape Powder, provides the benefits of one bottle of red wine with no sugar, no calories, and no alcohol in each capsule. After taking VINIA every single day for three months in clinical trials they’ve been able to demonstrate the ability to significantly increase the dilation of arteries, and more dilation of your arteries means increased blood flow. O.S. Hawkins shares that he has been using this product for two years with great results. Ilan shows a portion of the manufacturing process and shares why he does what he does and his deep sense of responsibility to return improved health and vitality to the world and the importance of the partnership between evangelical Christians and Israel.

Tonight on Praise: Rick Warren, Founder of Saddleback Church, Pastor, and "New York Times" Best-Selling Author of "The Purpose Driven Life: What on Earth Am I Here For?" tells us there is no more fundamental question than 'why am I alive?' He asks the question of existence (why am I alive?) significance (does my life matter?) and purpose (what am I here for?). He explains God's five purposes for our lives: 1. You're planned for God's pleasure. 2. You're formed for God's family. 3. You're created to become like Christ. 4. You're shaped to serve God. 5. You're made for a mission. To fulfill these five purposes love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength (worship) and love your neighbor as yourself (service). Let God love you because we were created for God to love. Pastor Rick shares his personal pain when his wife, Kay, had cancer, and when his son, Matthew, struggled with mental illness and committed suicide. Out of their greatest pain, Pastor Rick and his wife, Kay, began ministering to families with mental illness and families struggling with the suicide of a family member. Pastor Rick expresses the importance of recognizing the deeper the pain the fewer words should be used. Simply show up and shut up; this is the ministry of presence. Pastor Rick encourages viewers to use their pain to help others.

Tonight on Praise: Sheila Walsh sits down with Jordan Rubin and Todd Vincent to discuss the creation and purpose of their superfood products Ancient Nutrition. Jordan and Todd share how they connected and began the new venture of the Ancient Nutrition Center for Regenerative Agriculture. Organic truly means a way of raising and growing food that doesn't involve pesticides, herbicides, or fungicides. Regenerative is quite literally leaving the land better than you when found it. Regenerative Organic Certified is a new standard on foods, beverages, skincare, and now supplements. Organic Superfruits & Organic Superveggies are the first ever Regenerative Organic Certified supplements and are packaged in biodegradable packaging. Jordan shares that the vegetables in their formulation are perennial plants, which means you plant a seed once and for decades, if not generations, you reap a harvest. Todd shares how his farming is different and that they are using water buffalo, cattle, sheep, and goats on their farm and do not use fertilizer. The animals provide the fertilizer. Jordan shares his mission to end food waste. They work with twenty restaurants, health food stores, groceries, even hotels, to pick up all of their food scraps, to feed their chickens, ducks, and turkeys exclusively with those food scraps, then they make eggs that are donated to vulnerable populations. The birds follow the ruminant animals, buffalo, cows, goats, and sheep, and they build soil. They're almost through year one of a fourteen-year program. These animals will graze in a program fashion for six years, and the seventh year they will let the land go fallow, as the Bible says. And all the while scientists are on site measuring the results, so that they can share this information with the world. Jordan talks about the variety of fruits and vegetables contained in the products and the benefits of the compounds found in them. He also talks about the relation between gut health and brain health. Ancient Nutrition has a great partnership with Sprouts. They were the first retailer to launch their first Regenerative Organic Certified products, and TBN is the first to offer these products across the globe. To heal the planet, feed the world, and transform health, is their mission. What Ancient Nutrition exists to do as a founder and farmer-led company is bring information, hope, and tools to transform lives.

Tonight on Praise: Matt and Laurie sit down with Sheila Walsh in Israel as she brings her new first-time perspective to the Holy Land. We take a sneak peek at her brand-new series called "My First Trip to Israel with Sheila Walsh." Matt and Laurie talked about his mother's depression, how she was delivered and testified about it for the rest of her life and was so joyful. Sheila talks about growing up with a profound sense of shame because of her father's violence before his death by suicide, and her suicide attempt later in life. They discuss the acts of faith and miraculous healings as told in the Bible when Jesus told the disciples to go to the other side of the Sea of Galilee, the deliverance of the man filled with demons, the woman with the issue of blood, Jairus' daughter, and the centurion. Sheila tells viewers that although we may feel overlooked, forgotten, anonymous, or unworthy, Jesus not only sees us but seeks us out. That has never been clearer to her than since she set her feet on the soil of Israel. Although we think we know the stories, when we set our feet where Jesus set his feet, it changes everything. She will not be the same again. She invites viewers to come to Israel.

They discuss a new product called Vinia that helps increase blood flow. Ilan explains the technology across a lineup of critical polyphenols that can have a dramatic impact on our bodies as we look to experience a better, more wholistic life as we age. He shares that we are at the crossroads of three very important trends: health and wellness, the power of technology, and sustainability. Given what the world has experienced in the last two years, health and wellness has never been more on people's minds than ever before. Breakthrough technology is going to drive that quality of longevity in our lives, and as global citizens, we must make sure we leave the world in a better state for our children and our grandchildren.

His desire to share what he discovered with others led he and his wife to start the Mighty Oaks Foundation. They speak to active-duty troops based around the world, write books, give away books, provide a week-long recovery program called The Legacy Program at five different ranches around the country, provide free programs for our troops and even pay for travel for active-duty veterans, first responders, and their spouses. Visit mightoaksprograms.org for more information. Chad talks about the US withdrawal from Afghanistan and how Aziz became his teammate. He shares this story in his brand-new book, "Saving Aziz How the Mission to Help One Became a Calling to Save Thousands" and how he put together a team of former operations veterans to rescue one family: Aziz, his wife and six children. Another team member brought up 3,500 orphans that were left behind of former Afghan national army soldiers who had died in combat. They decided to help as many Americans, interpreters, their families, women, and children as they could. When God put the burden upon their hearts, all of them were obedient to that call and they witnessed a divine miracle and a series of events over the next three days that made it possible to rescue these 17,000 people. His team chose to stay, which led to a coalition effort with other organizations such as Mercury One, Might Oaks, Save Our Allies and Task Force Argo, and Samaritan's Purse, and over two months they got another 5,000 people out.

2ND Chance: Restoring Hope to America's Prisons #7121	57:30	57:30	REC	PA/O/E	4/28/2023	6:00 PM
					4/28/2023	9:00 PM
					5/05/2023	1:00 AM

2ND Chance: Restoring Hope to America's Prisons: California, about 120,000 inmates are crowded into state prisons. California seems to be a leader in "Get Tough on Crime." That jammed up our prisons. A violent facility, assaults between inmates and on officers are frequent. It's not good for the inmates. It's not good for the taxpayers, and it's not good for the folks that work in the Sheriff's department. We're going to have to come to a resolution on this, and we're going to have to do it by working together. Verdict as to penalty, count one, murder, we the jury recommend and fix the penalty as death. Gun crime is surging here, driven by gang turf wars. Inmates not only showed off drugs they had in their prison cell, but somehow, they obtained a handgun, defiantly waving it around for the camera. The state of Louisiana has the highest incarceration rate in the entire country, twice the U.S. average. Packed prisons have had limited success at rehabilitation. Sixty-three percent of released felons in the state are back behind bars within three years. So it shows that locking people up isn't the answer. It is not. The system is still ridden with problems. Thousands of inmates are held in isolation for years, or in some cases, for decades. Isolation breeds hostility. The war on drugs has failed. Dangerously overcrowded jail, costing the county millions of dollars, criminal justice reform to pursue bold change that will offer our fellow citizens a second chance. Long before Burl accepted Governor Tate's offer to serve as the head of the Mississippi Department of Corrections, he was leading revival within the Alcatraz of the South, the Louisiana State Penitentiary, Angola. Angola became a state-owned prison at the turn of the twentieth century. These 18,000 acres encircled by miles of dense bayou and barbed wire, held the title of "America's bloodiest prison." Here, morality was non-existent. Stabbings, riots, and assaults were commonplace, and convicts were labeled "worthless" and "irredeemable." Then in the mid-nineties, the lockup welcomed a new warden, Burl Cain, a former teacher, and good praying believer. Quickly, Burl recognized the system was broken and resolved to rebuild it by launching an initiative of reform that shifted the focus from punishment to rehabilitation. Burl helped to bring hope, respect, and trust to the incarcerated. Quite dramatically, conditions improved, violence declined, recidivism decreased. With every educational class and trade program, the inmates received what they had too long been denied, opportunity. They now had a chance to prove to others and themselves that they were more than the crime they committed. They now had a chance to hone a skill, discover a talent, excel at a job, or, in many cases, learn how to read and write. They were no longer just a felon, they became a student with potential, a tradesman with a future, a teacher with influence, a man with value and responsibility. What was once the bloodiest prison in the U.S. is a beacon of redemption, a testament to what could happen when we choose to see people, no matter their offenses, through the eyes of God. And today, the very same reformation that changed Louisiana, is happening amongst the men and women within the Central Mississippi Correctional Facility. Through the conviction of men like Burl and George, prisons throughout the south are seeing reform. Because of God's grace, America's most forsaken and dejected are transforming. It's true radical change. A spiritual awakening that proves revival can exist in confinement. No person is ever too lost or too broken and even the incarcerated can find freedom through Jesus Christ.

Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: Fear. It's a common struggle in today's culture. We lose sleep over the 'what ifs' 'the worse-case scenarios,' 'what we think other people are thinking about us,' and those are just a few examples. You may also know that several times in scriptures we're commanded to fear not. So what does it look like for the family of faith to honor God when fear comes our way? What does it actually mean to be fearless? Is it possible and how can we stand boldly for God's truth when it is less than popular? Join us as we talk about this and more with Ray Comfort, Author and Filmmaker, who shares his struggle with agoraphobia and what helped him get over this sense of anxiety and fear to become an evangelist, and Author, Scarlet Hiltibidal, who talks about some of the most common fears people have and shares practical tips on how to overcome our fears and help loved ones overcome their fears as well.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Some Christian men have found a unique way to serve God and improve their health at the same time. It's called Garage Gym Church and it represents a different take on Christian fellowship and grassroots evangelism. During the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, Chris Reardon found himself working out alone in his garage. As a Christian, he started combining those workouts with his personal worship time by listening to high-energy praise music and fiery sermons about things like overcoming adversity while he pumped iron and praying and reading scripture while resting between sets. When the pandemic subsided, Chris invited a handful of Christian friends to join him, and called it Garage Gym Church. It was such a positive experience Reardon is now partnering with "Faith & Fitness magazine" to encourage others to develop similar ministries. Brad Bloom, president of the Christian-based Lifestyle Media Group, which publishes "Faith & Fitness magazine," told CBN News Garage Gym Church could help men make Christ the center of their fitness and can be the venue that helps them lead others to Jesus. Seth Doherty, who participates in Garage Gym Church, said it's a good place for men to let down their guard and be honest about what's going on in their lives, including their spiritual lives. The Garage Gym Church implements a fast-paced, proactive format. What makes it even easier, Doherty said, is that many men already have home gyms. Marine Francis Edquid said his garage gym serves as a way to minister to people in his life who either don't know Jesus or who may have strayed from their faith. Edquid said most people like the idea of getting in shape in the private setting of a home. Garage Gym Church could be the missing link to connect to a never-before-reached segment of the population.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: Loneliness is rampant among nursing home residents nationwide after COVID-19 restrictions and lockdowns left a big hole in the quality of life for so many senior citizens. In the U.S., CDC data shows more than 200,000 long-term care residents and staff died from COVID-19. Many of them would have likely been banned from seeing family or visitors for months. Today, faith-based organizations like God Cares Ministry are responding to an overwhelming sense of loneliness left in the wake of the pandemic. Chaplain Bill Goodrich has been serving elderly communities for nearly 40 years. His non-profit, God Cares Ministry, seeks to find those who've been forgotten – and breathe life into them. The hidden health crisis of isolation reared its ugly head at the height of COVID. CDC mandates in long-term care facilities were put in place to protect the elderly but confinement took its toll. Unable to go inside during the pandemic, Chaplain Goodrich brought the church to them, teaching them from windowsills with big print scripture. They even have a ministry book called, "God Cares for You." As these homes open up, Bill's ministry is guiding and training volunteers across the nation, readying anyone with a heart for the elderly to help fight the isolation crisis. He understands more than a million people live in nursing homes nationwide and another million in assisted living facilities. Goodrich also believes there's a difference between providing care and genuine care. It can start by simply visiting a nursing home and sharing time with those who are alone or forgotten.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Perhaps you’ve noticed all the messages on social media, or the numerous products at the store, suggesting mothers of young children need to drink alcohol, and lots of it, to cope with the pressures of raising children. If you yourself are a young mom, chances are you’re being pressured to drink as part of the role. It’s called “Mommy Wine Culture,” and while it’s pervasive throughout American society, a growing number of mothers are pushing back against it. The troubling messages often try to be humorous and appear on merchandise like baby clothes saying, “Mommy Drinks Because I Cry,” wine glasses with the phrase “Mommy’s Sippy Cup” written on them, and adult t-shirts with “Coffee, Hocky Mom, Wine, Repeat” emblazoned on the front. Then there are all the memes like “The Most Expensive Part of Having Kids is All the Wine You Have to Drink.” As it turns out, the messaging reflects reality. Moms with young children are turning to alcohol, like Kelley Manley, who always felt “Mommy Wine Culture” was problematic, but drank with other mothers anyway, as a way to fit-in with them. Manley said she was shocked to discover mothers drinking around their children at nearly every conceivable occasion. Wine doesn’t take center stage only at in-person events like a child’s birthday party or play date, but young moms even bond over booze online, such as the “Moms Who Need Wine” Facebook group. Psychotherapist Ann Dowsett Johnston, best-selling author of “Drink: The Intimate Relationship Between Women and Alcohol,” told CBN News today’s young mothers are under an enormous amount of pressure, as they shoulder much of the family’s emotional labor, what she calls “the third shift.” She points out that while the struggles of mothers of growing children are very real, the idea that alcohol is the remedy, is a lie. Johnston said decades ago, moms drinking together while caring for their children was practically unheard of, but things began to change in the 1990s when the alcohol industry ushered in what she calls the “pinking of the market,” by manufacturing and advertising booze aimed specifically at women. Historically, men consumed the most alcohol, but now, women are catching up, with serious consequences. In the last 15 years, the greatest increase in consumption has been among women in their thirties and forties. Biological differences between the sexes cause women to absorb more alcohol and take longer to metabolize it than men. That means the same amount of alcohol typically damages a woman’s body more than a man’s. According to the CDC, after drinking the same amount of alcohol, women tend to have higher blood alcohol levels than men, and the effects usually occur more quickly and last longer in women. Alcohol also makes women more susceptible than men to liver disease, heart disease, cancer, cognitive decline, and sexual violence. U.S. health officials recommend women should drink no more than five ounces of wine a day. Canadian health officials go further, saying only two five-ounce glasses per week. In addition to the physical risks, there are psychological ones, as well, which is why Kelley Manley stopped drinking. She’s not alone. More moms are rejecting Mommy Wine Culture and turning to groups like Sober Mom Squad founded by Emily Paulson. Paulson said Sober Mom Squad is an online place where moms can meet online, and it sometimes connects people who live near each other so they can get together in person. Manley said rejecting Mommy Wine Culture can sometimes lead to a social shift. Some mothers take issue with Mommy Wine Culture because they’re concerned about the culture’s impact on a child’s self-esteem. So while pop culture and Big Alcohol try to convince new moms that life is better with booze, a growing number are rejecting that message for the sake of their own health as well as their family’s.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Mental health experts and Christian parents are sounding the alarm about the negative impact social media is having on our younger generation. Teenagers are experiencing a mental health crisis that is likely linked to time spent on sites like TikTok, YouTube, Instagram, and more. The CDC reports more than 44 percent of U.S. high school students surveyed reported feeling hopeless almost every day for at least two weeks in a row. More than half of teenage girls reported feeling persistently sad, a 10-year high, according to government data. At the same time, teens are spending increasing amounts of time on social media, with nearly half reporting being "almost constantly" online, according to Pew Research Center. Daniel Amen, M.D., adult and child psychiatrist, told CBN News while the statistics are frightening, they are not surprising, considering the very nature of social media. This desire of social media companies to want consumers to spend more brain time on their platforms happens even though they know, in some cases, that can be damaging, according to former Facebook executive-turned-whistleblower Frances Haugen who testified before a Senate committee. Mental health experts blame social media overuse for many of the psychological challenges kids face today. Licensed psychologist Carolyn Rubenstein, PhD, told CBN News she counsels young people who are suffering the ill effects of this technology, as are many of her peers. Dr. Rubenstein said too many teens feel bad about themselves compared to other people they see on social media, people who seem to be a lot happier and better looking, when in reality, they are neither. Cyber-bullying is another major source of teen angst. She said another cause for concern is the all-too-common activity known as "doomscrolling," which is compulsively seeking-out disturbing content that deepens a person's already existing feelings of fear, depression, and hopelessness. In addition to poor mental health, some Christians believe too much time spent on social media sites can lead to poor spiritual health, especially among teenagers. Kelly Newcom, author of Managing Media, Creating Character: Using the Technology Kids Crave to Develop the Character God Desires, and founder of Brave Parenting, an organization dedicated to helping parents manage their children's online activity, told CBN News that social media is harmful to Christian teens than most parents realize. She said Christian values contradict the foundations of social media, such as embracing idolatry. She said the nature of social media is deceptive, which is the opposite of Christianity. While it can be difficult for young people to reduce the amount of time they spend on social media, research shows it can help kids feel better. In one such study, teenage girls who cut their use by half for just a few weeks reported significantly improved mental health. Parents can help their kids cut back by first setting a good example. Experts recommend creating boundaries regarding what a child can do online and for how long. Parental control apps like Bark and Net Nanny can help enforce the rules parents set for their children. Frank Fox, group chief executive officer at SafeToNet told CBN News how Net Nanny works. In addition to limiting time spent on social media, experts say it helps if parents talk to the parents of their children's friends and agree to setting the same limits. On top of that, parents can help fill the time their children no longer spend on social media by arranging in-person gatherings for their teens.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: May is National Mental Health Awareness Month. While that recognition is important, for many adoptive families it is an awareness they must live with year-round. That's because statistics show adoptees are at a higher risk for mental health issues than other kids. And Christian families are stepping up to meet the need. When it comes to adopting, Christians are twice as likely to bring a child into their home than other Americans. According to research by the Barna study group, five percent of Christians have adopted compared to two percent of all Americans. Many parents feel they have a biblical mandate to offer love and hope – including to those bearing scars from past traumas. Michael and his wife Libby of Luckey, OH felt led to become foster parents after hearing a sermon about the biblical admonition to care for orphans. The Romanins have three biological children, and over the years they have also fostered 17 kids. In 2022, they adopted two more, explaining that abuse, neglect, and drug use are all reasons kids can end up in foster care. These are issues that make parenting more difficult. It is a wrong the Romanins have found that even love has trouble overcoming. Jedd Medefind is president of Christian Alliance for Orphans (CAFO) which works to help believers care for orphans and vulnerable children. He admits that while adoption can be a wonderful experience, there are exceptions. Dr. Stephen Grcevich is the president and founder of Key Ministry, a nonprofit that focuses on the church's role in ministering to families and children with disabilities. Grcevich points out that children in foster care and adoption are more likely to suffer mental and behavioral problems. According to Medefind, this is why ongoing support for adoptive families is vital. Thanks to the work of organizations like CAFO and Key Ministry, many congregations are now filling the void. While the Romanin family welcomes such help, they are quick to point out the greater need for more education and counseling. Grcevich adds that while many churches have established adoption and foster care ministries, some now are approaching the issue with mental health programs in mind. Despite those challenges, Medefind believes the benefits of adoption outweigh the negatives. Meanwhile, the Romanins are relying on that hope as they continue their adoption journey. In the end, Medefind offers words of wisdom to those thinking about adopting a child.

CBN National Security Correspondent Eric Philips Reports: Suicides are reaching epidemic proportions, and the numbers in the US military are up for the fifth year in a row. It's reaching generations affecting current troops, veterans, and families. Kim Ruocco knows this from personal experience. Her husband took his life while at the height of his military career. Major John Ruocco served as a Marine Corps pilot for 15 years. A really good one according to his wife, Kim, and the accolades don't stop there. It's a battle he lost in 2005. A social worker by profession, Kim often sensed subtle changes in her husband's behavior during phone calls. John became part of a growing statistic of active military and veterans who have committed suicide. The latest Pentagon research shows increases over the last five years with more than 500 military suicides in 2018 alone. A Veterans Administration report indicates some 6,000 veteran suicides each year between 2005 and 2017. Dr. Heather Kelly is director of military and veterans' health policy at the American Psychological Association. But there is help. After her husband's death, Ruocco started the Assistance Program for Survivors or TAPs. On the prevention side, the American Bible Society has rolled out the "God Understands Campaign" to help service members who are battling depression and other mental health challenges. It includes testimonies from people like Bryan Flanery who attempted suicide while in the army. Gordon Groseclose, a retired Army Chaplain who works with the God Understands Campaign, says social distancing in these times only magnifies feelings of isolation, and that could cause the already growing suicide numbers among service members to spike. He says the campaign provides a unique human and divine connection. In fact, experts say faith is what's called a "protective factor" when it comes to suicide. In other words, those who identify with all faiths are at a lower risk for suicide.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: With Memorial Day, the unofficial start to summer, just around the corner, doctors are warning against getting too much sun exposure in the months ahead. Skin cancer is the most common cancer in the United States. An estimated one in five Americans will develop skin cancer in their lifetime. There are three types of skin cancer. Basal cell carcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma are the two most common types and are rarely fatal. Melanoma is the third type of skin cancer and is far more aggressive than the other two. While comprising less than two percent of all skin cancers, melanoma leads to most skin cancer deaths. That's because melanoma is more likely to metastasize or spread to other parts of the body. Melanoma usually begins as an abnormal mole, that if left untreated, can grow deep into the body and enter the lymphatic system or the blood stream, where it can travel to distant parts of the body and form new tumors in critical organs like the brain, liver, or lungs. U.S. cases of melanoma have been steadily increasing over the last few decades, to about 100,000. Still, deaths have been on the decline, down to about eight percent of all melanoma cases, or approximately 8,000 deaths annually. David. M. Pariser, a dermatologist with Pariser Dermatology Specialists told CBN News if more patients understood how to recognize suspicious moles on their body, and if more people had regular, yearly, "mole checks" with a qualified, medical professional, more people would have problematic moles identified and treated before they metastasize. That means being able to tell the difference between a normal mole and an irregular one. One way to remember how to spot a suspicious mole is by becoming familiar with red flags, also known as the ABCDEs of melanoma.

A-Symmetry: Melanoma lesions are often irregular. One half looks different than the other half. Regular benign moles are usually symmetrical.

B-Border: Typically, non-cancerous moles have smooth, even borders. Melanoma lesions usually have irregular borders that are difficult to define.

C-Color: The presence of more than one color, such as blue, black, brown, or tan, or the uneven distribution of color can sometimes be a warning sign of melanoma.

D-Diameter: Melanoma lesions are often greater than 6 millimeters in diameter, approximately the size of a pencil eraser.

E-Evolution: If a mole has gone through recent changes in color, size, bleeding, or itching, this could be an indication of melanoma.

When a suspicious mole is identified, a doctor will likely perform a biopsy to determine whether it is melanoma. If it tests positive, the mole and some surrounding tissue is often surgically removed. New York-based dermatologist Dr. Whitney Bowe told CBN News she's passionate about sun protection for her patients, as well as for her own young daughter. Dr. Bowe recommends using a broad-spectrum sunscreen, which protects against both UVA and UVB rays, that has a sun protection factor (SPF) of 30 or higher. There are two main types of sunscreens, mineral, and chemical. Studies show some ingredients in chemical sunscreens were absorbed into the bloodstream and need further evaluation to determine if they pose health risks. One ingredient in particular, oxybenzone, has been shown in studies in animals and in human cells in laboratories to interfere with how some hormones work. Because of these concerns, some chemical sunscreen manufacturers omit oxybenzone and other questionable ingredients. Chemical sunscreens absorb into the skin and then absorb UV rays, converting them into heat, and releasing them from the body. Mineral sunscreens are actual physical blockers, acting as a shield. They sit on the surface of the skin and reflect UV rays. The key ingredients in mineral sunscreens are zinc oxide and titanium dioxide. They can leave a white cast on the skin and can be difficult to remove from the skin and clothing. Most dermatologists say using any type of sunscreen is safer than not using one at all. A survey conducted by the American Academy of Dermatology revealed many people do not use sunscreens correctly by, among other things, not using enough of the product, and not re-applying it often enough. Experts recommend using 1/2 teaspoon for the face and neck. If a person needs to put it on most of their body, such as when they are at the pool or the beach, an entire ounce is recommended. Sunscreen should be re-applied every two hours, or more often than that if the person is swimming or sweating. Dermatologists recommend other forms of sun protection such as wide-brimmed hats, sunglasses, protective clothing, and shade, especially during the hours when the sun's rays are the strongest, between the hours of 10:00 and 2:00.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Doctors say regular exercise is key to overall good health. However, if you're someone who thinks working out is boring and lonely, you might want to consider pickleball. It's now the fastest-growing sport in America, especially among older people who are looking for exercise they are able to do, that's good for not only the body, but also the mind. Players are thrilled to discover something so healthy is also really fun. Although pickleball looks like tennis, it's easier on the body. For example, there's less wear and tear on the joints. Pickleball is a slower game and much easier to grasp compared to tennis. Lessons are not needed. Like all sports, injuries are possible. Strains or tears in the feet, back, and shoulder are the most common, especially among older folks. Experts recommend people talk to their doctor before starting a new activity and warming up before hitting the court. Pickleball was invented in 1960s Seattle when two men wanted to play badminton but only had the net. So they improvised using equipment from other sports – a wiffle ball and ping-pong paddles. The name pickleball comes from the "pickle boat" in the rowing sport called crew, which instead of utilizing a designated team, uses various oarsmen from other boats. Pickleball surged in popularity during the COVID-19 pandemic, as people searched for ways to exercise outside, while keeping their distance. Health experts like Ashley Gorman, Ph.D., Board Certified Clinical Neuropsychologist with Atlas Neuropsychology, say pickleball offers many of the same brain benefits as ping-pong, and sport doctors recommend it to help reduce cognitive decline, largely due to the constant hand-eye coordination. Pickleball can also improve reflexes. Many players say the social element is what keeps them coming back for more. This element is also good for the brain. Exercise can help us sleep better, and vitamin D from sun exposure can improve our mood. So while trying a new sport can be intimidating, especially if you've been on the bench for a while, pickleball can be easy, fun, and very healthy.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: For many people, going to the hospital can make for an uneasy experience. First, patients and families worry about the illness or test they're facing. On top of that, there's the possibility of acquiring an infection during their stay. Armando Nahum knows what it's like for a loved one to become infected in a healthcare setting while being treated for a different reason. Sadly, he's probably seen it more than most. It began when Armando's father came down with pneumonia while hospitalized for bypass surgery. Then, during a stay for a different type of surgery, Armando's wife Victoria developed a staph infection. While those two survived their infections, Armando says his 27-year-old son did not recover, due to a sepsis infection he contracted after being admitted and treated for skydiving injuries. On any given day, one of every 31 patients has a healthcare-associated infection, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. These infections lead to tens of thousands of deaths each year. Patients can acquire several different types of infections, such as viral, fungal, and bacterial while staying at hospitals or other healthcare settings including medical rehabilitation centers or nursing homes. Bacterial infections are the most common. According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control Prevention, urinary tract infections, bloodstream infections, and pneumonia are often associated with invasive devices such as catheters or central lines, and ventilators. Surgical sites can also become infected. In addition to the damage to the patient, these infections cost the healthcare system billions of dollars, according to Tracey Odachowski, Director of Infection Prevention and Control at Sentara Health. Hospitals, such as Suffolk, Virginia's Sentara Obici, constantly look to reduce the risk. For example, after disinfecting rooms, advanced technology helps ensure they got rid of the bacteria. Workers take a surface sample by swabbing the area just cleaned, then inserting the swab into a reader that immediately analyzes the level of pathogens detected in the surface sample. Another disinfection practice involves saturating the room with ultraviolet C (UVC) light, which studies show can reduce by one-third, the transmission of three antibiotic-resistant bacterial infections, methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA), C. difficile, and Acinetobacter. Some hospitals now use copper to help fight infections, on hard surfaces like copper-infused over-bed tables, and even in linens, like bed sheets that have copper woven into them. Most healthcare workers understand the sooner a medical device is removed, the lower the risk of infection. Therefore, they regularly, sometimes daily, evaluate patients to determine how quickly a device can safely be taken out. They also closely watch patients for symptoms of an infection, like fever or diarrhea, and whether patients need to be tested for infection. The sooner one is identified, the sooner the patient can be isolated to stop the spread. While hospitals and other healthcare settings are taking steps to reduce infections, there's actually a lot of patients and their families can do, both ahead of time and during the stay. The healthier a patient is before entering the hospital, the lower their risk. Experts say a big part of overall good health involves a robust gut microbiome. That means having good bacteria in the intestines, which can often fight off the bad bugs encountered at the hospital, especially those resistant to antibiotics, like C. diff. Patients are advised to ask their doctor whether antibiotics are truly needed, because these drugs tend to kill all bacteria in the gut, including the good. Odachowski advises family members who are taking a patient home from a healthcare setting to resist the temptation to ask for a urinary catheter for the patient. Sometimes family members prefer this device because it often saves them trouble of cleaning the patient, but urinary catheters are often the source of infection. Armando's experience with hospital infections motivates him to help others as the co-founder of the Safe Care Campaign, an organization dedicated to working on early prevention and detection of all types of infections, whether they occur in a healthcare setting, in the community, or at home. People who visit someone in a healthcare setting should also wash their hands to help prevent the spreading of disease. Some hospitals have lower infection rates than others. If you have a choice, talk to your doctor about which facility is best for you, or consult "Hospital Compare" on the Medicare website.

Tonight on Praise: The expanding immigration crisis at the U.S.-Mexico border. Cities near the U.S.-Mexico border brace for the end of Title 42, the Trump era immigration policy which barred migrants from crossing U.S. borders to prevent COVID-19 from spreading in holding facilities. The end of Title 42 is expected to lead to a massive surge in migrant asylum seekers streaming across the border, adding to an already desperate problem. The El Paso City Council this week unanimously approved extended a disaster declaration due to a state of emergency to assist in transporting and sheltering migrant asylum seekers. Some schools in the El Paseo area notified parents about precautions they are taking to ramp up security to make sure people who aren't supposed to be there aren't able to get on the school campus. An El Paseo City official said that there are now thousands of migrants camped out around the local church and near the cities' homeless shelter. The humanitarian crisis is staggering, especially for the children. Nearly 130,000 migrant children entered the U.S. Government's shelter system in fiscal year 2022, an all-time high driven by record arrivals of unaccompanied minors along the southern border. Who is caring for these children? Where are they now? How do we balance the need for security with the need to show compassion. Can government provide all the answers or is there room for Christ-centered solutions that Christians can provide at this critical time? While the crisis at the southern border continues another crisis is looming in D.C. Treasurer-Secretary Janet Yellen notified Congress this month that the U.S. could default on its debt as early as June 1st if legislators do not raise or suspend the nations' borrowing authority before then. Forecasters warn a default would likely send the U.S. economy into deep recession with soaring unemployment. President Joe Biden and top Republicans and Democrats from Congress sat down this week to try to resolve a three-month standoff over the 31.4 trillion-dollar U.S. debt ceiling. The banking industry is experiencing turbulence as well. Earlier this month, First Republic became the second largest U.S. bank by assets to collapse. This follows the collapse of Silicon Valley Bank and Signature Bank last month. How secure are our financial institutions? Can the government be trusted to find lasting solutions? Will our politicians set aside their political differences for the financial wellbeing of our nation? With all the shaking and instability in our once trusted institutions, people are feeling the emotional impact. Uncertainty about the future, loss of income, inability to pay bills and repay debts, and unemployment can take a toll on mental health. Studies indicate that even the Christian community is experiencing a mental health crisis. As Christians, how do we discern the times? Join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz now as they discuss the pressing matters of our day from a Christian worldview.

CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: The U.S. northern border is experiencing a surge in migrants. With resources strained, states along the U.S. border with Canada are now demanding more federal assistance or permission to defend the border themselves. Commissioner of the New Hampshire Department of Safety, Robert Quinn told lawmakers his state's troopers are ready and able to step in to help support border security. To date, the Biden administration has rejected the states' requests. New Hampshire is part of the Swanton Sector of the northern border, which also includes parts of Vermont and New York. That sector alone has experienced a nearly 850 percent increase in migrant crossings over the last year, and many of its border patrol agents have been diverted to the South. Homeland Security experts say much of the movement at the northern border is being driven by Mexican cartels and other criminal organizations. Dr. Donell Harvin, former chief of Homeland Security and Intelligence for the District of Columbia, said an unsecured northern border also makes the U.S. susceptible to terrorism. U.S. Customs and Border Protection said it's assigned an additional 25 agents to the northern border to help with the current surge. A majority of the agency's resources are still tied up in the South.

Every night in America, over 500,000 people sleep on the streets without a roof over their head. Millions more are homeless without a place to call their own. While homelessness is caused by many factors, in a nation where home ownership should be attainable by any citizen, this is not the case. Many people have given up on the American dream of owning a home. The reasons are many and complicated. Taking Care of Business examines our nation's housing dilemma.

Tonight on Praise: From Ramsey Solutions in Franklin, TN, Sheila Walsh talks with Personal Finance Expert, Radio Talk Show Host and Best-Selling Author, Davey Ramsey. We take a sneak peek of his radio talk show "The Ramsey Show," which now airs weekdays on TBN at 5pm ET. Dave explains how marketing, technology, and a lack of emotional and spiritual maturity have increased consumption and consumer debt. He shares his story of financial failure and recovery, explains the steps to get out of debt and personal finance taught through Financial Peace University, and the common threads of millionaires. He announces the "America's Labor Crisis with Dave Ramsey & Mike Rowe" which airs Friday, May 19th at 8pm ET on TBN. He talks about the labor crisis with 70 million able-bodied males choosing not to work with a shortage of 4 million jobs unable to fill in America, as well as the anxiety, depression, and suicide associated with it. Dave gives several causes of money success or failure: relationships, character, addiction, divorce, physical health and gives advice for parents to raise money-smart kids.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: In a surprise move, OpenAI CEO Sam Altman called for lawmakers to regulate artificial intelligence technology before it's too late. Altman spoke before the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation on Wednesday, where he warned that AI could pose a serious threat to society if it's not properly controlled. It's been less than a year since ChatGPT was released to the world – and A.I. technology can already do so much more. From speech writing and tutoring to machine learning, it can create new content such as music and art. It can even create "deep fake" videos and audio. Altman's comments were echoed by U.S. Sen. Richard Blumenthal (D-CT) who chairs the Senate committee. Blumenthal said he was "deeply concerned" about the potential dangers of AI and that he was committed to working with Altman and other experts to develop effective regulations. Blumenthal opened the hearing with an AI-generated greeting and audio app that impersonated his voice based on Senate floor speeches. Calls for regulation come at a time when AI technology is rapidly advancing. In recent years, AI has been used to develop new medical treatments, create self-driving cars, and even write poetry. However, as AI becomes more powerful, technology experts like Burton Kelso say it could become dangerous. Other fears include AI replacing millions of jobs. It could even falsify information for malicious gain or be used to erase key moments from history. However, one of the biggest concerns deals with national security. Rapid advances in AI technology are complicating efforts here and abroad to agree on laws that govern emerging technologies. China has already drafted regulations that could shape the future. The debate over the regulation of AI is likely to continue for many years. However, Altman's comments have helped to raise awareness of the potential dangers of this powerful technology. It's unclear when or what kind of measures will be implemented to regulate AI and ensure it is used for good.

CBN Reporter Gary Lane Reports: In the artificial intelligence industry, 350 top executives are warning future advancement could one day become dangerous to humankind. That's why groups like the Center for A.I. Safety warn we should take steps now to develop the technology responsibly. The executives fear that a rapid advance in A.I. may lead to the loss of millions of jobs, and quantum leaps in language technology like ChatGPT could be used maliciously to spread propaganda and disinformation. Christian groups believe that development poses major risks to missionaries. For instance, Jon Hirst, Innovation Officer at SIL International, suggests Christian adversaries could use A.I. to harm or embarrass ministries and their workers. Hirst urges ministries to work together on systems and processes to validate identities. Ted Esler is president of Missio Nexus an association of U.S. and Canadian agencies and churches. He believes A.I. is here to stay and sees tremendous potential. That could mean limitless opportunities for Christian ministry. For example, Bible translators already use A.I. in their work on scripture translations, thus speeding up that overall process. Online chatbots could also direct people to the Bible and Christian resources in more than 4,000 languages, helping overcome cross-cultural communication obstacles. And that's why Hirst and other ministry leaders believe it is important for Christians to keep their focus on who's behind the controls of the A.I. revolution.
