Meredith Gregory studied what she calls the paradox of Cracker Barrel. She shared how they each have a distinct sense of place - like going home to your grandparent's house, but they also look exactly the same wherever you go. And later in the show, two and a half years ago, Tim Baird and his family moved into a new home - a seemingly ordinary life event. His new digs came with 600 college students. The building is called the Creativity and Innovation District. It's on Virginia Tech's campus and has been intentionally built to foster community. He's using the CID building to study how a space becomes a place.

Community Issue: Humanitarian aid

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Kirsten Gelsdorf has spent over 20 years working for the United Nations and other organizations in the humanitarian sector. She discussed her experience in disaster zones and clears up some commonly held misconceptions about humanitarian aid. Also in this episode, only 10 states have passed a Bill of Rights for domestic workers. Jennifer Fish shared that while it's certainly a step in the right direction, these protections often exist only on paper.
