Community Issue: Law Enforcement

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Conversations around community policing are polarizing. It can be hard to have a meaningful and useful conversation. Brian Williams shared that he believes that conversations that first hit the heart can impact the head and hands, bringing corrective and collaborative action. And later, police suicide rates are on the rise. It's clear that mental health is a real problem in the profession. Stacey Clifton discussed her studies on how the culture of police—a sort of macho suppression of emotion—makes it extra hard to address their mental health crises.

Community Issue: Cultural Cuisine

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

Deb Freeman, author of Setting the Table discussed how the French dish macaroni & cheese became so baked into American cuisine. She informed us that it was first cooked for Thomas Jefferson by Chef James Hemings. Also in this episode there was a discussion regarding the cultural heritage of food like benne seeds with Chef Amethyst Ganaway. While snacking on benne wafers and cooking during the interviewed, she reminded listeners that across troubled waters, enslaved people carried benne seeds and grew them in a new land.
