Community Issue: Innovations by Women

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

In the mid-20th century, American women were bombarded with tips, tricks, and goods to help them become the perfect housewife. Laura Puaca studied four records released by General Mills that featured Betty Crocker “talking recipes.” She discussed how they were developed in collaboration with blind homemakers, providing a service that had long been an option for their non-disabled counterparts. And later, hearing aids are now available to purchase over-the-counter and without a prescription. Christine Eubanks discussed who should be considering OTC hearing aids.

Community Issue: Racial History

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

This episode is a compilation of the producers' favorite pieces. It began with piece about The Soulmasters was an interracial soul band founded in the 1960's in Danville, VA. Jerry Wilson (The Soulmasters) and John Irby were the two African-American lead singers of The Soulmasters. The other 8 members of the band were white. Producer Matt Darroch listened as Jerry reflected on his three years in the band, and what it was like touring the South during the height of segregation. And later, the first federally registered Black neighborhood in the United States was Jackson Ward in Richmond, Virginia. The JXN Project was established to reconstruct the gambrel roof cottage of Richmond's first known Black homeowner: Abraham Skipwith. The JXN Project has since revealed renderings for the Skipwith-Roper Cottage. Founder Sister Sesha Moon discusses the project.

Community Issue: Black History Month

Program Title and Summary: "Community Insight" is a segment of the public affairs program Consider This. Throughout the month of February, we are airing a special series in honor of Black History Month titled "Gone, But Not Forgotten." It explores locations that traditionally served the black population, but are no longer in existence. Ken Szymanski hosted this segment with Dr. Tekla Johnson who is Assistant Professor of Africana Studies at University of South Carolina Union. The place we are learning about is the Brooklyn neighborhood in Charlotte, NC. During an urban renewal program in Charlotte property of residents was taken by the city and sold to the banking industry for redevelopment. She explains how this not only affected the residents of Brooklyn, but their families for generations to come. She also discussed the key players and how they carried out these tasks. Ken Szymanski hosted an additional segment of this series with Ms. Elizabeth Graves. Much of her family attended Lincoln Academy and she recalled its history. The school was founded by Emily Prudden for African American children of freed slaves. It eventually was taken over by the American Missionary Association. The school had an excellent reputation and graduates went on to attend universities.

Throughout the month of February, we are airing a special series in honor of Black History Month titled “Gone, But Not Forgotten.” It explores locations that traditionally served the black population, but are no longer in existence. Ken Szymanski hosted this segment with Mr. Fred Glenn. He is property owner of Baltimore School. He shared details of how the school served the community where it was located, highlighting that often times it would play more of a community center role instead of just a school. He is leading an effort to save the building and create a living history museum. The organization’s goal is to inspire today’s youth to appreciate the opportunities they are given by exposing them to how difficult it was in the past.

Community Issue: President's Day

Program Title and Summary: With Good Reason

When Colin Rafferty moved to Virginia in 2008 he didn't know much about the presidents, so he set out to read a biography of each one. What began as a personal project eventually turned into his new publication - a collection of wild, genre-bending essays on every past president. He discussed his writings and favorite stories. Then later in the show, Eric Drummond Smith guest-curated an art exhibit called "The Cherry Bounce Show" at the William King Museum in Abingdon, VA. He called on artists from all over Appalachia to create modern artwork, with one small stipulation... it had to be inspired by a presidential election. He shared why he initiated this project and what it produced.

Dr. Colita Fairfax discussed the historical significance of Maggie Walker, an African American teacher and businesswoman who was also the first woman of any race to charter a bank in the United States. She shared that a monument to her now stands in the former capital of the Confederacy. Steve Hanna took us on a walking tour of Fredericksburg, Virginia's historic markers and monuments to understand its untold stories. He explained how a town's markers can be selective in the story that they tell about a town and not give the full story.

Grey's Anatomy, Scandal, and How to Get Away with Murder aren't just popular tv shows—they're also groundbreaking in the way they are presented by producer Shonda Rimes. Michaela Meyer is the author of Adventures in Shondaland, a book about how Rimes has changed the way we make and watch TV. She explained her theories about Rimes creating a female-centric form of storytelling unique to pop culture today. Imelda O'Reilly published her first poem when she was just seven years old. Now a filmmaker, her short film Eggs and Soldiers examines a single father and son struggling to adjust to life in New York after emigrating from Ireland. She discussed what inspired her to do this project.

Mt. Trashmore has the distinction of being the first landfill converted into a park. And for many years, it was a popular spot for locals to hangout in Virginia Beach. On April 1st 1992 as an April Fools prank a radio station shared that Mt. Trashmore was leaking gas and could explode at any moment. It all went very wrong. Emergency services came to shut it down immediately and the station went under investigation with the FCC. Tommy was suspended without pay and returned to work two weeks later. In grade school, many of us learn that America was founded as an exceptional society - a land of religious freedom and boundless opportunity. But Nancy Isenberg explained that Britain saw colonial America as a wasteland where they could get rid of their underclass of poor whites, otherwise known as "waste people." She shared this insight into early American culture.

Kiera Allison is author of Sound Relations: The Culture of Listening in Modern Medicine. She stated that the stethoscope is going extinct because it doesn't tell accurate information about our health. She went on to explain that we experience pain as narrative -- there's a beginning, middle and hopefully end. The story we tell about the pain has a lot to do with how we experience it. Studies have shown that doctors have biases towards their patients. This impacts the treatment that people receive. Miranda Cashio shared simulation she and her research partner created to determine if their students shared those biases, and if those biases affected the care that they gave their patients.
