It would be difficult to overstate the influence on American television of director James Burrows. Co-creator of Cheers, he also directed 237 of the long-running show's 275 episodes. He directed every episode of Will & Grace, the groundbreaking show that turned gay characters and storylines into must-see TV. He also directed 75 episodes of Taxi, 32 episodes of Frasier, 15 episodes of Friends, and multiple episodes of Phyllis, The Bob Newhart Show, NewsRadio, and many others.

His sitcom work all began with an episode of another pathbreaking series, The Mary Tyler Moore Show in the early 1970s. Altogether, he has directed more than 1,000 episodes of American comedy television. In his new memoir, Directed by James Burrows, he's sharing stories from his legendary career working on the most successful and influential sitcoms of the past half century.

Join us for this online program to hear how James Burrows shaped popular, high-quality comedy TV in America.

The Case For Second Hand Hiring

Jeffrey Korzenik

Author, Untapped Talent: How Second Chance Hiring Works for Your Business and the Community

Ken Oliver

Executive Director, Checkr Foundation

Jeff Korzenik will be in conversation with Ken Oliver, the executive director of San Francisco-based Checkr Foundation. Oliver leads one of the country's most important initiatives for encouraging second chance/ fair chance hiring within technology and other industries. With perspective gained from his own experience incarcerated in the California prison system, Oliver will question Korzenik on the origins on the business perspective on people involved in the justice system, the barriers to employment faced by returning citizens, and why he believes business is a critical partner to a more just world. The conversation will rely heavily on real-world examples or success and the necessary investments employers must make for fair chance hiring to succeed in business terms.

Jeffrey Korzenik is the author of Untapped Talent: How Second Chance Hiring Works for Your Business and the Community. Korzenik is an unlikely advocate for those with a criminal record. Korzenik argues that offering career opportunities to those overlooked because of a mistake in the past are our single best solution to our labor shortage. Such second chance/fair chance hiring, in his view, not only strengthens the economy, but offers a critical path to safer and healthier communities. In 2020, Korzenik was elected to membership in the Council on Criminal Justice in recognition of his work on the intersection of the labor force and the justice system. nonprofit boards.

It's become common for homeowners to install solar panels to provide themselves with emission-free electricity. But increasingly more attention is being paid to decarbonizing things inside the home – the machines that heat and cool water and air, dry our clothes and cook our food.

The Inflation Reduction Act includes many ways for homeowners and renters to start to electrify their lives. And in some places, builders are developing highly efficient, all electric homes from the get-go. What more is needed to make our buildings greener and get away from fossil fuels?

Who Makes Disaster Recovery Possible

Saket Soni

Founder and Director, Resilience Force

Greg Dalton

Founder and Host, Climate One

Who cleans up and rebuilds our communities after floods, fires and hurricanes? COVID redefined America's definition of "essential workers," but many who help communities recover from climate disasters remain underpaid and overlooked.

In 2006, Saket Soni got an anonymous call from an Indian migrant worker in Mississippi who had scraped together $20,000 to apply for the "opportunity" to rebuild oil rigs after Hurricane Katrina. The caller was only one of hundreds lured into Gulf Coast labor camps, surrounded by barbed wire, and watched by armed guards. In Soni's new book The Great Escape, he chronicles one of the largest human trafficking cases in modern American history—and the workers' heroic journey for justice.

Today, Soni is the founder and director of Resilience Force, a national nonprofit that advocates for the rising workforce that rebuilds after climate disasters. Join Climate One host Greg Dalton in conversation with Saket Soni as we explore the surprising connections between climate disasters, migrant labor and resilience.

High inflation, rising interest rates, sweeping tech layoffs, a crypto meltdown. The recent economic news has been less than encouraging, leading the International Monetary Fund to warn of "storm clouds" descending on the global economy. At the same time, GDP in the United States grew to more than $20 trillion in 2022. The Bay Area, largely thanks to tech, had the fastest growing economy in the United States, with GDP increasing 4.8 percent. The United States is at or near full employment. What does it all mean for workers, investors, and Americans' pocketbooks? What impact are the Fed's actions having?

Michael Boskin of Stanford's Hoover Institution, former chair of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, will share his insights into the U.S. economy, productivity, the evolution of work and impact of tech, and whether we will tip into a recession. UC Berkeley's Maurice Obstfeld, former chief economist at the IMF, will assess the ongoing impact of the war in Ukraine, China's COVID woes, and other trends shaping the global economy.

In March 2019, His Holiness Pope Francis said—now famously—that “the Church is not afraid of history.” The pope was speaking about opening the estimated 16 million pages of archival material for the pontificate of Venerable Pius XII (1939–1958), which became accessible for research in March 2020.

February 2023 marks nearly three years since one of the most important new archives related to the Holocaust opened. What does the process of research in these archives look like on the ground? What have scholars discovered? What crucial questions remain, and how do they reshape our understanding of this era?

In 2012, Regina Martínez, a prominent journalist reporting on political corruption and abuse in Mexico, was found brutally murdered in her bathroom. This tragic act of violence sent a clear message: No journalist in Mexico was safe. Troubled by this news, Katherine Corcoran, then leading the Associated Press coverage of Mexico, traveled to Veracruz to uncover the truth about Martínez's death.

Now Corcoran reveals what she learned during her investigation and recounts her own experiences battling cover-ups, narco-officials, red tape and even threats.

The Life and Legacy of a True Statesman

Lecturer, Stanford University's Center for International Security and Cooperation; Former Reporter and Editor, The New York Times

In Conversation with David Kennedy

Professor Emeritus of American History, Stanford University; Former Director, Stanford's Bill Lane Center for the American West

When former Secretary of State George Shultz turned 100, he published a piece in the Washington Post on what he had learned over his long career. "Trust is the coin of the realm," he wrote. "If it is present, anything is possible. If it is absent, nothing is possible." Three U.S. presidents put their trust in Shultz's abilities, including Ronald Reagan, who tasked him to improve Cold War relations with the Soviet Union.

Shultz, who died in 2021, also achieved success in the corporate world and in academia, serving as head of San Francisco's Bechtel Corp. and as a distinguished fellow at Stanford's Hoover Institution.

A new biography, In the Nation's Service, offers an inside look at Shultz's legacy, from his work on Middle East peace to later efforts to eliminate nuclear weapons. Author Philip Taubman, longtime New York Times editor and reporter in Washington and Moscow, draws on Shultz's personal papers to shed new light on how he helped shape U.S. foreign policy, and how his style of conservatism has all but vanished from today's Republican Party.

Host, "Last Week Tonight with John Oliver"

The United States prides itself for its maverick soul, but Sathnam Sanghera says it inherited the ambition, brutality and thinking of its empire roots. Sanghera reveals the hidden legacies and modern realities of the British empire and makes the case that to understand America, we must first understand British imperialism.

He says the pernicious legacy of imperialism is rooted in our everyday lives yet remains shockingly obscured from view. Sanghera offers a sobering appraisal of Britain and America's political histories to help us move forward to a more just future.
